Traffic Toll up To 601

CHICAGO (AP)— Traffic accidents across the nation during the Memorial Day holiday weekend took a record toll of 601 lives, compared with 560 in the nonholiday period of similar length two weeks ago.

The count for the four-day holiday that ended at midnight Tuesday was the highest ever for a 102-hour Memorial Day period, but was well below preholiday estimates.

The total compared with the previous high for the holiday-542 during a three-day weekend in 1966. In the most recent four-day observance of Memorial Day, in 1963, traffic fatalities totaled 525.

The National Safety Council last week had estimated the final toll this year would range from 650 to 750.

Traffic fatalities hit record high totals last year on Memorial Day, Independence Day, Labor Day and Thanksgiving Day periods. However, totals fell short of record levels during Christmas and New Year celebrations. The all-time high death toll for any holiday period was 748, set during the four-day Thanksgiving period last year.

Memorial Service Held

More than 200 persons attended a Memorial Day service at 10 a.m. Tuesday at the Garden of Memories.

Flags of deceased veterans buried in the cemetery were displayed.

Msgr. Walter McGrane, pastor of St. Francis Xavier church, opened the program with an invocation.

Carol Clayton sang "America the Beautiful."

Then the Rev. Joseph Wagner, pastor of First Methodist Church, delivered the message.

Varying sentiments of sorrow, pride, remembrance and forgetting are felt today, he began.

Thousands across the land are taking part today in what has been termed "a great ritual of remembrance."

And in the midst of the celebration will be the grandeur and meaning of the American flag.

A little boy, caught up in the excitement and tenseness of the day, asked "What is the flag for?"

"Two Seabees stood outside an ancient temple and watched as an elderly man walked up to the temple, pulling a little cart. He stopped at the foot of the long

Shriver Asked to Investigate War On Poverty Impasse in Bootheel

BENTON - Robert M. Edwards, president of the Delta Area Economic Opportunity Corporation board of directors, has sent a telegram to Sargeant Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity at Washington, D.C., requesting an investigation of DAEOC problems.

The telegram was sent Monday night after Edwards learned of a press release of Don Thomason, OEO regional director at Kansas City. The release stated that DAEOC would not receive funds for the Head Start program because the DAEOC board had dismissed Lloyd Phillips as Head Start director.

Phillips and Bill Graves, both assistant directors of the DAEOC office at Portageville, were dismissed by the DAEOC board May 22 after the two had appealed a previous vote to dismiss them. Thomason had ordered the board to grant the two a hearing so that they could answer charges listing the reasons why they were being discharged.

The vote on the motion to put the two back to work was tied, 12-12, and failed to carry for lack of a majority. The regional office, however, has refused to honor the board's decision, charging that the board was unable to act as a comprehensive unit.

"The situation surrounding the dismissal of Graves and Phillips has reached a stalemate," Thomasons news release stated.

"This stalemate has resulted from the 12-12 vote. Because it has been impossible for this agency to resolve this matter wherein some individual would have been selected to serve as director of the summer Head Start program, only two alternatives are available:

"(1) Some other agency must be located which would be willing to accept the responsibility for administering the summer Head Start program. The agency must be willing to expand this responsibility and accept other Office of Economic Opportunity programs, or

"(2) There will be no summer Head Start program for the six-county area of Stoddard, Scott, Dunklin, Pemiscot, New Madrid and Mississippi Counties served by DAEOC.

"It is my sincere hope that some organization located in this particular area and which can qualify will be willing to accept the responsibility for this most important program and will make its availability known to this Regional office at 215 West Pershing Road, Kansas City, Missouri 64108."

Edwards said that although the release was sent to all area new media, no copy was sent to the DAEOC board or the DAEOC office at Portageville.

His telegram to Shriver requests that the action of the regional director's failure to fund the Head Start program be investigated by the Washington office.

In the telegram Edwards pointed out that Phillips and Graves had been dismissed by the board by a vote of 14-8 and that two requests for hearings by the two men were denied on 17-6 and 15-8 votes before Thomason ordered the meeting.

Thomason had notified the board that unless Phillips and Graves were given a hearing, the Head Start funds would be

$1 Million Cotton Loss

McClure Boy Dies In Crash

Corwin Hethering McClure, nine, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. McClure, 505 Park Street, died as the result of a headon collision Monday at 7:15 p.m. at the outskirts of Columbia, Ill.

He was a passenger in the car driven by his mother, Mrs. Della McClure, a sister, Carol and a brother, Stephen, and Mrs. Sarah Fuller and her two children. Mrs. McClure and the four children, were treated in a Belleville hospital.

The accident occurred at 6:45 p.m. at a bypass between Washington and Clark streets at Columbia, as the McClure car was traveling north on highway 3, when a car driven by Eleanor E. Leathen, Jennings, crossed over the center line and struck the McClure car.

Corwin McClure was born in Sikeston Sept. 29, 1957, and was a third grade pupil in the Lee Hunter school. He had the lead part in a play, "Snoopy Flies to Agbar," presented before the Southeast Missouri Teachers Association meeting at Cape Girardeau in March.

Surving besides his parents are the brother, and sister, his paternal grandparents, Dr. and Mrs. T.C. McClure, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., and his maternal grandparents, Judge and Mrs. Roland G. Busch, Cape Girardeau.

Private graveside rites were held Tuesday at 4 p.m. in the Garden of Memories cemetery, with the Rev. Joseph H. Wagner, First Methodist pastor, officiating, with the Welsh Funeral Home in charge.

McClure Damage to Bootheel Crop Exceeds 1966

By Don Roberts

NEW MADRID - A $1 million cotton crop loss has been estimated for the Bootheel by F. Reed Granger, state director of the Federal Crop Insurance Corp., of Sedalia.

An expected 1,200 policy holders will make claims for their cotton loss on 2,500 units (farms) by Thursday.

An additional 12 adjusters to the nine working in the area have been called to assist in appraising and inspecting the loss.

The seven-county area consists of New Madrid, Dunklin, Pemiscot, Stoddard, Mississippi, Scott and Butler counties.

Joe Bartolacci, district supervisor of Delta District 4 said 90 percent of the farmers have replanted their cotton twice, about 30 percent have planted three times and about 10 percent have planted only once.

In comparison to last year, Bartolacci said "The 1967 crop loss is greater than that of 1966. Last year about 60 percent of the cotton crop was lost, and this year it is still too early to tell but an estimated 90 percent crop loss will be made."

The main reasons for the loss were cool weather, excess moisture, flooding and conditions brought about by excessive moisture, Bartolacci said.

The average farmer will have about $35 an acre invested in his cotton crop at this time, Bartolacci noted, and Federal Crop Insurance Corp., is paying from $30 to $45 per acre depending on the type of plan the farmer has.

Thirty percent of the wheat in the Delta area was lost because of frost and excessive moisture, Granger said. The wheat in the Bootheel was damaged more than any other area in Missouri because the Bootheel crop was farther advanced than in other areas in the state.

The field office in New Madrid has been operating seven days a week, since May 19 and will continue to do so until the job is done, Bartolacci said. All claims are expected to be in by Thursday.

To qualify for Federal Crop Insurance, the farmer must go to a substitute crop or leave his land idle. If the farmer replants his cotton, he will receive no coverage.

The farmers must be patient to allow an adjustment to be made, and a release will be made as soon as possible, Bartolacci said.

Many farmers in the Bootheel feel that since the cotton was damged soybeans will be the big crop as it was last year. Most farmers will not plow up what's left of their cotton and replant soybeans as they did last year.

Soviet Ships Advance

CAIRO (AP) — Soviet warships began sailing through the Bosporus today, raising the threat of a naval confrontation with the British and Americans in the Middle East crisis, Turkish reports said.

Naval sources in Istanbul said the advance party consisted of a submarine repair ship and four armed escort vessels bound for the eastern Mediterranean.

The Turkish navy command said the Soviet government reported it will send 10 warships, in all, through Turkey's strait to the Mediterranean, where the powerful U.S. 6th Fleet and British ships are deployed.

One source said that even if these ships join a Soviet flotilla of about a dozen ships, the naval balance would remain strongly in favor of the United States. The Soviet flotilla, which has been shadowing the 6th Fleet, includes submarines, spy trawlers and destroyers.

In other developments:

Syria, whose charge that Israel planned an invasion touched off the current crisis, ignored the new Jordanian-Egyptian defense alliance and issued virulent propaganda attacks against King Hussein of Jordan.

Iraq announced that troops had left Baghdad, the capital, to join other units en route to Egypt to face an Israeli build-up on the border. Baghdad radio said other troops will leave soon to join other Iraqi soldiers in Syria.

Israel, already mobilized, announced the extension of the 47-hour work week to a possible maximum of 71 hours to help make up for a manpower shortage.

The Jordanian Parliament in Amman, the capital, adopted a resolution hailing the Egyptian-Jordanian defense pact as "the first step toward the liberation of Palestine and the regaining of the usurped land."

Hunters Hurt In Collision

BELLEVILLE, Ill. - Sam L. Hunter, his wife, Patti, and daughter, Cynthia, 12, were injured in a four-car fatal accident Monday at 11:20 a.m. on highway 460, one mile east of highway 157.

Killed was the Rev. John Haynes, 64, of East St. Louis.

State police said the Haynes car jumped a concrete barrier, went into the opposite lane and collided with three cars.

Hunter, who was driving one of the cars, sustained fractured nose and ribs. His wife and daughter received back injuries.

The other two drivers, Dorleska Wyley of Carbondale and Ronald Greenburgh of St. Louis, were not injured.

Haynes was pronounced dead on arrival at a Belleville hospital. The injured were taken to St. Mary's hospital at East St. Louis.

Telephone Prefixes Will Switch to Numerals

Telephone prefixes in Sikeston and Morehouse will switch from GRanite 1 to 471 and from NOrthfield 7 to 667 in December, John Donoho, Southewestern Bell Telephone Company manager, announced today. This involves no change in dialing procedures because the position of the numbers is identical to that of the letters.

The change is necessary because of the growth in the number of telephones. The use of all numerals increases telephone number possibilities by nearly 50 per cent over the combination of letters and numerals.

About three-fourths of the telephones in the United States have been converted to ANC.

Telephone directories listing the new numbers will be distributed when the changeover is made.

"All telephone users in Sikeston and Morehouse will be notified of the conversion to all number calling, and their new number, by letter," Donoho said. "Persons who plan to order stationery and other printed materials on which telephone numbers are carried should keep in mind that their number will change in December."

Hale Joins TV Team

Jim Hale, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Hale Jr., will receive his master's degree in journalism this week, and has joined a two-man television news reporting team with station KTVI, channel two, St. Louis, beginning Monday.

He began his news broadcasting in Sikeston, broadcaster, and was a Cape Girardeau telecaster before entering the journalism school. Since January of 1966, he has been with a Columbia television station.

At his new post he and his partner, Glenn Wilson, will make two broadcasts daily in color, at 5:30 p.m. and 10 p.m.

His wife and daughter will join him in St. Louis this weekend.

Federal Grant For Dexter School System

DEXTER - The Dexter school system has been given a $50,000 federal grant to plan a child development center.

The grant is for a feasibility study and to draw up plans for the center, Thurston S. Hill, superintendent of schools, said.

The program would provide guidance, counseling, remedial reading, psychologist and psychiatrist services for schools in a 12-county area.

The grant is for one year. The grant requires that a program plan be drawn up for federal approval before funds for the program are approved, Hill said. The $50,000 grant is for the purpose of studying and drawing up a program.

If the plan for the center is approved, funds for the actual program will be granted.

On June 2-7 members of the advisory committee will visit centers in Los Angeles and Palo Alto, Calif., to study child development programs. Information gained will be used in writing up the plan for the operational grant.

Members visiting the centers are:

Hill; Mary Jo Richmond, director of the project; Lynn Twitty, superintendet at Sikeston; Alva DaVault, superintendent at Malden; W. V. Hill, superintendent at Caruthersville, and Fred Morrow, superintendent at

HANDS OFF, MR. THOMASON

Administrative chaos in the "war on poverty" has brought the program to a near standstill in southeast Missouri, after what was at one time a promising start.

This chaos has plagued the Delta Area Economic Opportunity Corporation (DAEOC) since its very inception, but responsibility for the problem can ultimately be laid at the door of the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) top brass in Washington and Kansas City.

A $500,000 Head Start Program for this summer is particularly confused, but the entire anti-poverty structure so laboriously erected over the past two years is also in serious trouble.

We refer to a statement from the office of OEO Regional Director Don Thomason, printed in a Kennett newspaper Thursday, that "if the internal problems of DAEOC were not resolved by May 15 (later changed to 19), the OEO would make direct contact with local schools to give them Head Start funds, by-passing DAEOC completely.

"Internal problems" is Thomason's euphemism for the DAEOC board's assertion of its right to hire and fire employees without veto from the regional office in Kansas City.

Mr. Thomason's decision to let school boards deal directly with OEO in setting up Head Start projects is somewhat amusing, because it overturns a basic OEO policy of the past two years. It is always amusing to watch these well-paid bureaucrats reversing their own decisions.

In the spring of 1965, Charleston and several other school districts dealt directly with OEO in Washington and set up Head Start programs. The summer sessions were hailed as a great success in getting "disadvantaged" children ready for school.

However, the OEO was not satisfied that school boards were sufficiently representative of low-income people. Therefore, since the fall of 1965, all war on poverty projects in southeast Missouri, including Head Start, have been sent to the OEO through a regional agency - the DAEOC board - which presumably is more representative of the poor than are regularly-elected local government agencies.

The DAEOC board has been organized, reorganized, and re-reorganized on orders from Washington and Kansas City, to get the proper "balance" of Negro and white, and of low and high income board members. Elections have been held time and again to comply with the ever-changing guidelines issued in Kansas City and Washington. Presumably the final result of all this reorganization would be a board that could speak with some authority on the conduct of the war on poverty in southeast Missouri.

But this year the board, which was set up in accordance with OEO directives, decided to fire two of its employees - one of whom is the "fair-haired boy" of the Dunklin County economic opportunity establishment. (Mr. Thomason is a native of Dunklin County.)

Thomason then ordered the DAEOC board to put the two men back on the payroll and give them another hearing. The board met, and reaffirmed its determination to dismiss the two employees. A third hearing is scheduled for next Monday.

So the issue is drawn between DAEOC and Thomason, and it involves nothing less than two basic policies of the Office of Economic Opportunity:

1. Whether it is wise to structure the war on poverty on a multi-county basis; and

2. Whether the popularly elected DAEOC board is to control its own employees and the war on poverty in southeast Missouri, or is to be merely a rubber stamp for, and political tool of, Don Thomason.

We have always argued that single county boards, if left in control of their own projects, would have been able to run the war on poverty within their borders much more efficiently and with more effective control than has the loose confederation headquartered in Portageville.

If Thomason is determined to break up DAEOC, then we say more power to him. Return control of the economic opportunity program to the county boards, where inter-county politics will not wreck it.

However, if it is still OEO's administrative policy to force counties into a consolidated agency like DAEOC in order to get anti-poverty funds, then it behooves Thomason and his minions to stay out of what is essentially an internal matter - the selection of their employees by the directors of a corporation chartered under the laws of Missouri.

The show-me spirit of meet me in St. Louis is being matched with Paris in the spring this May.

A replica of "The Spirit of St. Louis," the monoplane in which Charles Lindbergh became the first to fly across the Atlantic alone, is on display at the 27th French International Air Show.

The plane provides the theme for the American exhibit. It is suspended from a reproduction of the Gateway Arch, hopefully without the chemical smog or the construction difficulties that almost have submerged the real one in Missouri's largest city.

The plane was flown across the Atlantic in a cargo plane. A civilian pilot flew it down the Seine, circled the Eiffel tower and landed at Le Bouget, the airfield whose fame is synonymous with Lindbergh.

The faded original, now hanging in the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, cost $10,500. The copy, used in a moving picture of the Lindbergh exploit, cost $50,000.

The memory of Lindy at LeBouget should put down the competitive challenge of the Russians in the show.

When he landed there 40 years ago on May 21, 1927 his shyness enchanted the French.

The slender Lindbergh was cast in a mold made for heroism but not for public acclaim. His anti-public attitude is not cute in a man, who has otherwise matured.

There have been clouds in the Lindbergh years - the horror of the kidnap-murder of an infant son, the isolationism and open anti-Semitism on the threshhold of World War II. He has matched this record with dedicated if anonymous service to his country in World War II and the Korean conflict.

He was last reported in Saigon.

It is just as well for this country's world image that the aging recluse stayed away from the French air show. It is better to remember him as he was.

GAMBLING FOR GOOD AND EVIL

The name of the game is education. The New Hampshire state lottery, the first in modern times, was sold in the name of much needed aid for public schools. The same excuse was made for a state lottery in New York, where $1 tickets go on sale on or shortly after Thursday, June 1. The first drawing for prizes is scheduled for July 20.

A player's chances of winning - up to $100,000 with an annual special bonus of $250,000 - are supposed to be 1 in 4,167. These odds are unacceptable to professional gamblers, but they are expected to be attractive to the poor. The state is now predicting annual gross revenue of $360 million, of which $198 million would go to schools. What the N.Y. Times (April 21, 1967) calls an "insupportable" 15 per cent of the take will go for administration.

One argument for the lottery was that the poor would switch from playing the illegal numbers game to the state-sanctioned wheel. The reverse may prove to be true. Individuals habituated to the lottery may turn to the more convenient daily numbers runner. New Hampshire's lottery has proved nowhere nearly so productive as expected.

James Samuel Ezell, a historian of the lottery in America, observed in 1960: "If history teaches anything, a study of the over 1,300 legal lotteries in the United States proves these things: "They cost more than they brought in if their total impact on society is reckoned; and 160 years' experience indicates clearly that the most careful supervision cannot eradicate the inevitable abuse in a system particularly susceptible to fraud."

APES BRUSH UP ON ART

At long last an effort is to be made to answer one of the burning questions of our time:

Is modern art really art or can any ape do it?

South African artist Walter Battiss is going to experiment with chimpanzees at the Pretoria Zoo in an attempt to find a basis for the evaluation of modern art, which many people suspect can be produced just as well by chimps as by humans.

Battiss doesn't believe the simians are capable of being true artists. What they do with brush and paint is just physical movement, he thinks. What he hopes to learn is how many human artists are in the same league.

"This ape art may help us to find out how much of modern art is purely mechanical movement without any emotion," he says.

It seems only fair that monkeys should help people with this art problem since some artists have been making monkeys out of people for years.

THREE KINDS OF BONES

Duffie Daugherty, coach at Michigan State, describes the qualities he looks for in his athletes at the university. "Of course, we like them big," he said, "but we'll settle for players with 3 kinds of bones -- a funny bone, a wishbone and a backbone. The funnybone is to enjoy a laugh, even at one's own expense. The wishbone is to think big, set one's goals high and to have dreams and ambitions. The back bone - well, that's so a boy will have the gumption to get up and work and make all those dreams come true."

BETTER BEGIN NOW

A young girl said to her mother, just after a white - haired visitor had left their home, "If I could be such a nice old lady as that - so beautiful and sweet - I wouldn't mind growing old."

The mother replied, "Well, Janie, if you want to be that kind of an old lady, you'd better begin now. She didn't become a lady like that in a hurry."

TRY IT YOURSELF

Think of a number, then double it. Add 4 and multiply by 5. Add 12 and multiply by 10 Subtract 320. Strike off the last two ciphers and you will again have the original number.

Phillips Brooks, American clergyman (1835-93): "Some day, in years to come, you will be wrestling with the great temptation, or trembling under the great sorrow of your life. But the real struggle is here, now, in these quiet weeks. Now it is being decided whether, in the day of your supreme sorrow or temptation, you shall miserably fail or gloriously conquer. Character cannot be made except by steady, long-continued process."

. . .AND THE BEARD IS STILL WINNER

The well - known acceleration effect of technology isn't just confined to transportation or communications or war - making. It's evident in every-day human activities, too. Like shaving.

Primitive man, we can only guess, whacked off his whiskers with a flint ax. A few hundred thousand years later, some genius discovered how to make metal axes and more than one revolution was begun.

When the first actual razor was made is not known, but bronze razors still retaining a fair degree of keenness have been found in ancient Egyptian tombs.

A few thousand more years passed before the straight - edge, concave razor, still used by barbers, brought the first change in form since the days of the pharaohs. But then technology really set in.

In 1895 came the original safety razor with inexpensive, thin, replaceable blades. The first one - piece double-edge razor was introduced in 1938 and was soon followed by the single - edge injector razor. In the meantime, the first electric whisker whacker had been patented in 1928.

Adjustable - blade razors appeared in 1958. Then in 1960, the discovery of a method of chemically treating blade edges ushered in a new era. Only a couple of years later, marketing of a stainless steel blade started a new revolution.

The latest entry in the battle of the beard features a continuous band of six plastic - coated shaving edges housed in a replaceable cartridge.

But whiskers keep growing and the battle goes on. It's estimated that the average man spends about 3,350 hours - or 139 days - out of his lifetime just shaving.

WORST OF THE LOT

A young private received a letter from home and was so badly shaken by it he sought consolation from the chaplain. The letter stated, "Your girl friend, Emmy Lou, is in bed with Arthritis."

"That isn't so bad," said the chaplain. "Certainly it isn't anything to get so upset over."

"You just don't understand," explained the private. "Why I know the whole Ritis family and that Arthur is the worst of the lot."

A spinster was visiting the reservation at Yosemite. She showed a great deal of interest in the sex life of one of the big braves standing by.

She plied him with very personal questions and then coyly asked -- "How does a great big man like you get satisfaction up here where there are no young squaws?"

The Indian regarded her gravely and at length replied, "You see cow?"

"Yes, I see cow . . . you don't mean?"

"Yes," replied the brave, "me make love to cow."

"Also," went on the brave, "you see horse?"

"Yes," replied the spinster -- horrified. "I see the horse. . ."

"Oh, dear!" cried the distraught old maid.

"No," grunted the Indian sadly, "no make love to deer . . .run too fast."

H.L. Hunt Says

VALUE OF ELECTORAL COLLEGE

The Electoral College system of choosing the President and Vice President met a critical need in the establishment of our Republic. Time has brought an awareness that the system needs of a Constitutional Amendment providing for direct voting for the nation's two top executives.

Far superior to this proposal is the Congressional District Plan, with every voter casting his ballot for one elector from his district and two electors from the state at large. This is a reform that would retain the Electoral College system and no doubt would attract favorable attention to our Republic throughout the world.

On the other hand, abolition of the Electoral College by adoption of the direct vote for President and Vice President would have little if any favorable impact for our nation. Totalitarian dictators extend to their populace the privilege of going to the polls and casting votes for their dictator and his henchmen.

They could laugh up their sleeves if they found the claimants of freedom offering their populace a chance to cast a direct vote. They could rightly ask what had become of our cherished governmental system of providing checks and balances and protection for our minorities instead of dictatorship.

Retention with reform of our Electoral College is imperative if we are to preserve our Republic. The District Plan of reform is the constructive way to accomplish this. A resolution calling for a Constitutional Amendment to put the plan into effect is before Congress now.

NEW YORK (AP) — Remarks that hospital patients get tired of hearing — and overhearing:

"Well, well, well. And how do we feel this morning?"

"You're being put on an 800-calorie-a-day diet. While you're here you might as well take off a few pounds."

"If he tries to pinch me just one more time, you'll have to assign him another nurse."

"Naughty, naughty boy. If you don't eat all your breakfast prunes, sir, I'll just have to bring them back to you again for lunch."

"I don't know who brought that bottle to you, sir, but I'll have to take it from you. The only beverage you're allowed is lukewarm water. Shall I bring you a fresh glass? You're allowed as much as you want."

"Wake up, wake up! It's 6 o'clock."

"This is the day the doctor takes the bandage off. Some of the patients really scream when that happens, but in your case I don't think it will hurt that bad."

"The doc won't let you smoke yet, eh, Jim? Well, as a visitor, I guess that rule doesn't apply to me. You don't mind if I light up a cigar, do you?"

"I don't know why you complain so much about the bedpan, Mr. Cadwallader. There's nothing to it, once you get the hang of it, and after all you can't expect to be quite as comfortable in a hospital as you are in your own home."

"Remember, when we go into his room, tell him he looks swell -- no matter how you really think he looks."

"After all, I am merely your nurse — not your wife or your mother."

"They may tell you you'll feel as good as new in a couple more weeks, but I had a pal who had his gallbladder out, and he didn't get his golf game back to normal for a full year.

"Just as a friendly tip, Jim, I'd get back on the job as soon as I could if I were you. That new guy they got doing your work is going at it like a house afire."

"Since this is only a semiprivate room, sir, I'm afraid we'll have to move another patient in. But don't worry, he won't be any trouble to you. He's in a coma."

"Ah, so you're leaving us, Mr. Cadwallader. Your bill for the 14 days, counting medicine and incidentals, will be $976.50. Help, help! Quick, someone. Mr. Cadwallader has fainted. Better take him up and put him back in bed again."

Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON -- Last year in Tel Aviv I interviewed Maj. Gen. Isaac Rabin, the Israeli Army Chief of Staff, regarding the defense of his country in case of such a crisis as has developed today.

He pointed to a map of the Near East. It was a graphic map, showing his Little Country, about the size of Massachusetts, with a 610-mile border and a population of 2,500,000 surrounded by 50 million Arabs. The map was so jagged that at one point a corridor of Jordanian-Arab land protruded like an arrow toward Haifa. And the distance between that arrow and the Mediterranean Sea was only seven miles. Thus, the width of Israel at one point is about equivalent to the length of Manhattan.

Gen. Rabin, nevertheless, seemed confident of his ability to defend his country.

"We depend for our defense first on being alert; second, on our ability to buy arms from the west to counterbalance Russian arms in Arab hands; third, on our reserves.

"We cannot afford a huge standing army, so we depend on a small, well trained, well armed reserve, ready to be called up within 48 hours. Every young man and woman in Israel must serve two years and then spend one month each year in military training.

"We have to be on the alert with modern weapons Tel Aviv is only nine minutes from Cairo by fast jet bomber, and four minutes from Jordan."

There is no question about the fact that the Arab leaders have entertained a healthy respect for the Israeli Army. Traveling through Lebanon, Syria, and Jordan in 1957, one year after the Israeli advance to the Suez Canal, I found Arab leaders terrified of the Israelis. The last thing they wanted was another showdown with fast-moving Israeli tanks and armored cars.

SURPRISE IS ALL IMPORTANT

But that was 10 years ago, and since then it has been quite evident that at least two of the Arab states, Egypt and Syria, have been systematically building up for a showdown.

Thus, the important advantage which Gen. Rabin emphasized -- surprise -- is now gone. And this is why Israeli leaders have been restless over the delay caused by U Thant's pilgrimage to Cairo, the United Nations debate, and the stern advice of London and Washington not to precipitate hostilities.

During this intervening time, a huge Egyptian army is reported concentrating in the Sinai Peninsula between Israel and the Red Sea. Thus it would be difficult, if not impossible, for Israel to repeat what Gen. Moshe Dayan did in 1956 when he used old geological trails through the desert to get behind the Egyptian army and seize the Suez Canal.

What adds to Israeli pessimism is the fact that the Arab states have been embarked on a long and systematic arms buildup, thanks to help from Moscow, in preparation for a final attempt to carry out the Arab boast of pushing Israel into the sea.

When I was in the Near East a year ago, I obtained confidential figures on Arab strength. The situation has not changed materially since then. Here is the line-up of military might in the Near East:

TANKS - The Soviet has sent 2,500 tanks to the Arab states, of which 500 are T-54's, just as powerful as the American M-60's, and considerably more powerful than the American M-48.

Against this, Israel has about 600 tanks, chiefly M-4 Shermans, some centurions, and a few M-48's. In the past, the Israeli army has been able to outmaneuver and outgun its Arab opponents. However, the inescapable fact is that Isreael is outnumbered in tanks about four to one.

AIR POWER -- The Soviet has sent about 150 bombers to the Arab states, chiefly Ilyushin 28's, of which 120 are flown by Egyptians since Israel is a smaller country, no bigger than Massachusetts, with long borders completely surrounded by Arab neighbors, this is considered ample force to bomb any and every Israeli city -- if war comes.

In addition, the Arab states are well equipped with the latest Soviet fighter planes, MIG-19's, and MIG-21's. The total Egyptian air strength is estimated at 500 planes, including 52 MIG-21's, 80 MIG-19's, 60 transport planes, and 40 helicopters.

Israel has about 450 aircraft, including 75 mirage fighters equipped with Matra air - to air missiles, considered the latest thing in French fighters. It also has 55 Ouragon fighter-bombers, one squadron of transport planes supplied by the United States, one squadron of helicopters and 60 magister jet trainers.

MISSILES -- Russia has now delivered to Egypt 14 fast patrol boats of the Komar class plus four of the OSA class, each carrying missiles somewhat on the order of our polaris set - up except that they are not nuclear. They have a range of 20 miles, and since Israel is long and narrow, with depth in one place of only seven miles, these patrol boats could do tremendous damage in case of war.

Reporting from Israel last year, I wrote:

"While the world has been worrying about the war in Vietnam and Kashmir, a less-publicized but long - festering sore is reaching the danger point at the crossroads of Asia, Africa and Europe.

"On the borders of Israel and the Arab states, tensions are growing, troops are maneuvering, shots ring out every night."

MARCH DAY

On such a day last spring
I placed your chair
So you could watch
As I set brick
Around the violet bed.
I thought I saw the sun
Shine through your pale thin hands.
Today, the robs hop
Where your chair stood.
White violets blow
Above the bricks I laid.

HE HEARS ME!

I LOOKED into the glory of the Father's handiwork;
The silence of the stars cried out His name!
I looked upon the tossing sea and felt his firm control
And knew the mountains, too, declared His fame.
Though small am I beside the sea, below the lofty peak,
A grain of desert sand beneath the sky,
Our God, the great Creator, gave His Son to die for me
And hears so graciously my faintest cry.

Detroit Takes Over First With Sweep

By RON RAPOPORT
Associated Press Sports Writer

The Detroit Tigers are going to have to teach Willie Horton how to slide and the Chicago White Sox are going to have to teach Ron Hansen how to keep his mouth shut.

Horton, the burly Tiger outfielder, drove in a key run with a single in the first game of his club's doubleheader victory over the Sox Tuesday, but when he tried to stretch it into a double, he was out on a throw from catcher J. C. Martin to Hansen despite an attempt at a slide.

Hansen, understandably pleased with himself even though he had a three-inch gash on his left arm from Horton's spikes, made a remark. That tore it for Willie who went after the infielder with a vengeance. It took the entire Detroit team the better part of five minutes to calm him down.

And he never did calm down enough to suit Chicago. In the eighth inning of the nightcap, Horton hit a tremendous home run to the upper deck in right field, tying the game and setting the stage for the eventual victory.

The Tigers moved into first place in the American League, 1½ games ahead of the Sox with their double triumph, 4-2 and 4-3. In other Memorial Day doubleheader action, Baltimore split with Cleveland, 5-4 and 2-3, Washington swept two from Kansas City 6-2 and 4-3 in 11 innings, Boston won a pair from California 5-4 and 6-1 and New York split with Minnesota 4-3 and 0-3.

Hansen, who at 6-foot-3 and 200 pounds was able to handle himself adequately in the fracas with the 5-10, 195-pound Horton, said later he couldn't remember what he'd said to so infuriate the Tiger outfielder.

But umpire John Rice described Hansen as saying, "Nice going. You're going to have to come in here again."

For his part, Horton said, "He thought I tried to spike him. I don't know all those trick slides."

The second game had its disagreements too, with Chicago Manager Eddie Stanky playing the game under protest apparently because Tiger pilot Mayo Smith made two trips to the mound in one inning to see pitcher Joe Sparma, in violation of the rules.

Cards No-Hit Dream Faded Into 21 Cincinnati Win

By DICK COUCH
Associated Press Sports Writer

After waiting eight years for his first big break, Dick Hughes was prepared to wait 55 minutes for the chance of a lifetime.

His patience proved to be a virtue — but his fast ball let him down just a few steps short of the Hall of Fame.

Hughes, a 29-year-old rookie who labored for eight years in the minor leagues before catching on with St. Louis late last season, pitched seven perfect innings against Cincinnati Tuesday night, striking out 12 and weathering a 55-minute rain delay after the sixth.

But hot-hitting Tony Perez led off the Reds' eighth with a triple, igniting a two-run rally, and the National League leaders nailed a 2-1 victory over Hughes and the Cardinals by pulling off a triple play in the ninth.

In another cliff-hanger at San Francisco, Jim Bunning ended opposing pitcher Juan Marichal's eight-game winning string with a ninth-inning homer, lifting the Philadelphia Phillies past the Giants 5-4.

Pittsburgh divided a doubleheader with Houston, winning the nightcap 4-3 after the Astros took the first game 3-2, Atlanta split with the Chicago Cubs, bowing 12-5 in the opener before rebounding for a 4-1 victory, and Los Angeles slugged the New York Mets 7-2 in a single game.

Perez tripled off the center field wall, extending his hitting streak to 17 games, after Hughes retired the first 21 batters he faced in a bid for the 11th perfect game in baseball history.

One out later, Vada Pinson tied the score 1-1 with a double and then scored the deciding run on a single by Leo Cardenas.

The Cards struck back in the ninth when Orlando Cepeda singled and advanced to second on Tim McCarver's single. Don Nottebart then replaced Reds' starter Jim Maloney and Phil Gagliano hit his first pitch to shortstop Cardenas.

Cardenas flipped to second baseman Tommy Helms for the force on McCarver and Helms' relay to first baseman Deron Johnson doubled Gagliano. Cepeda hesitated at third, then broke for the plate, but was nailed on Johnson's throw to catcher John Edwards, completing the game-ending triple play.

"I sent Nottebart in to pitch, hoping he would throw a low ball for a grounder," said Reds Manager Dave Bristol. "He sure did."

Hughes, who wound up with a three-hitter, 13 strikeouts and his second loss in four decisions, said he tried to slip a fast ball by Perez with the count 3-2 in the eighth.

"I was just trying for a strike," he said. "My slider was not going where I wanted it to, and after the rain stopped the game I began relying on my fast ball."

Bunning's second homer of the year broke up a 4-4 duel with Marichal, who had won eight in a row after dropping his first three decisions. Tom Haller hit two homers for the Giants, tying the score with a bases-empty blast in the eighth.

Donn Clendenon's double in the eighth inning scored the winning run for Pittsburgh in the nightcap after Rusty Staub's sixth inning homer gave the Astros their first-game victory.

Rookie Don Wilson checked the Pirates on seven hits in the opener and Ed Mathews hit his 496th career homer for the Astros in the second game.

Mack Jones drove in three runs with a triple and his second homer of the day, powering the Braves past the Cubs in their nightcap. Two-run homers by Billy Williams and Ron Santo, coupled with Ferguson Jenkins' 12-strikeout pitching, helped the Cubs breeze home in the first game.

Nowell Real Estate Opens Babe Ruth Season With 7-4 Win Over Reiss Dairy

Nowell Real Estate, behind the three-hit pitching of Ricky St. Cyn took the 1967 Babe Ruth season baseball opener at V. F. W. stadium Monday night, by defeating Reiss Dairy, 7-4.

The Nowell squad scored seven runs on 11 hits and handed the loss to Reiss Dairy's Leible.

Wilson went three for four at the plate in leading the Nowell offensive attack. Spencer and Voliva each collected two hits.

Newberry, Schlosser and Watkins collected Reiss' lone hits.

In the second game Harts Bread opened with a 9-4 win over the Bank of Sikeston.

The Bank's loss was attributed to errors and base on balls. Each squad collected four hits.

Throop got the only extra base hit in the opening night activities, a double in the fourth inning.

Tuesday night's activity had Anchor Toy taking a 5-1 win over Home Materials and Reiss Dairy battling Harts bread for nine innings and a 7-6 victory.

Miller hurled a two-hit, one-run game at Home Materials in the opening game for both squads.

Corn and Schatzley collected doubles for the only extra base hits

Beal allowed four hits and five runs and was issued his first loss of the season.

Reiss Dairy evened its record at 1-1 for the season with its nine inning victory over previously undefeated Harts Bread.

Newberry pitched his first victory of the season, allowing three hits and six runs in nine innings.

Reiss scored seven runs on six hits and handed Throop the loss. Reiss' Newberry also contributed in the hitting department for his team as he collected two hits in three times to the plate, one of his hits a double.

Mrs. Bill Storey Paints, Knits, Refinishes Furniture

Editor's Note: This is the 39th in a series of articles about the home life of Sikeston area families.

By RUTH DILLENDER

Mrs. Janet Storey likes to paint, knit and antique furniture. She has refinished the table and chairs in her dining room.

Mrs. Storey is supervisor of the paste-up department of the Daily Standard. She has worked for the newspaper five years.

Her husband, Bill, is owner of the Storey and Son Construction Company. They live at 112 Ruth St. The couple has one son, Gary, 12 years old. The family attends the First Baptist church.

Mrs. Storey is a member of the Business and Professional Woman's club and served as recording secretary two years.

Mrs. Storey is embroidering a baby quilt for an infant the family is expecting in August.

Favorite recipes of the Storey family are:

DOUGHNUTS

3 eggs or 2 eggs plus 1 yolk
1 cup sugar
4 tablespoons melted butter
1 cup milk
3½ to 4½ cups flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon soda
Deep fat
Powdered sugar

Beat the eggs until thick, then add sugar and beat until light. Add the melted butter and milk. In 3 cups of flour sift the dry ingredients and add to the liquids. Add enough more flour to make as soft a dough as may be easily handled.

Roll out, cut and fry in deep fat, preferably lard, at 370 degrees to 375 degrees. Test with a piece of bread in a fat thermometer is not available. If the bread quickly fries a golden brown the fat is hot enough.

If the fat is not hot enough the doughnuts become grease-soaked. The added yolk helps prevent this also. Drain on brown paper and shake in bag containing powdered sugar. Doughnuts are best kept in a stone jar or crock, covered.

PEACH CRUMB PIE

Mix 2½ tablespoons tapioca, ¾ cup sugar, ½ teaspoon salt, 4 cups fresh peaches, 1 teaspoon lemon juice and let stand five minutes. Spoon into unbaked 9-inch pie shell. Sprinkle with topping and bake 45 to 50 minutes in 425 degree oven.

Topping:

Mix ½ cup brown sugar, 1/4 cup flour, 1/2 teaspoon cinnamon and 2½ tablespoons soft butter. Work with fork until size of peas.

BAR COOKIES

Heat oven to 350 degrees and grease a 7 by 11 pan.

Mix 1 cup graham cracker crumbs and ½ tablespoons oleo melted. Cover pan with mixture. Then add in layers 1 cup chocolate chips, 1 cup pecans, 1 cup coconut and 1 can Eagle Brand milk.

Bake 30 minutes. Leave in pan to cool. Then slice. Do not overbake.

BEEF CHUCK ROAST

3 lbs. beef chuck
2 tablespoons A-1 steak sauce
1 package dry onion soup mix
1 can cream mushroom soup
Potato halves

Spread meat with sauce, layer of potatoes, onion soup mix and and then mushroom soup. Wrap in heavy duty aluminum foil and seal. Bake 3 hours at 350 degrees. Add 20 minutes cooking time for each extra pound of meat.

FOR A DAUGHTER GRADUATING

Was it just yesterday I saw her leave the nest,
A fledgling, starry-eyed!
I drank the bitter dregs of loneliness,
(And no one knew I cried.)
Was it just yesterday she cried.)
Was it just yesterday she picked along the way.
Somebody's violet,
And pinned it in my hair that April day.
(Of course I didn't fret.)
Is this my Carol Lynne? I hear them call her name,
She walks with ease and grace;
The sky is hers and she will proudly claim
Her rainbow and her place!

SANCTUARY FOR SPIES

We have said it before but it needs to be said over and over that giving the U.S.S.R. permission to open up consulates in our cities is merely giving them additional sanctuaries from which to carry on their subversive and spying activities without fear of having to suffer any penalty therefore. No matter what one of these spies working in a consulte might do, we could not impose any penalty beyond insisting that he leave the country. Our citizens or defecting citizens from the Soviet Union could be kidnapped and held within these consulates entirely beyond the reach of our law officers. They could be spirited out of the country, as has been done before, and we might never know what had happened to them.

No reason of any importance has been advanced as to why these consulates should be opened, while many reasons have been brought forward showing the dangers that they will create for the safety of our country.

One rarely mentioned reason for not granting permission to the U.S.S.R. to open these consulates is the fact that, up to now, the Soviet Union has no consulates anywhere in North, South or Central America. Our Latin American neighbors to the south have so far resisted all pressure to permit Soviet Union consulates to be opened in their countries. If we not grant this permission to the Soviet Union it will be difficult if not impossible for our Latin American neighbors to continue to refuse it. They will undoubtedly succumb to continuing pressure and the communists will therefore acquire sanctuaries all over the Western Hemisphere from which to carry on their subversive activities. We ought not to help them in their efforts to overthrow western civilization either in our country or in the Central or South American countries.

Rationing Blueprint Ready If Needed

WASHINGTON (AP) — If wartime rationing should ever become necessary again, the government has a standby blueprint ready along with other nonmilitary mobilization plans.

But don't get edgy.

Federal planners gauging the impact of the Vietnam war on the U.S. economy stress they see no need on the horizon for rationing, a fading memory of World War II.

"I don't know of any substantial, serious proposal that we have on rationing or wage and price controls," says a top official of the Office of Emergency Planning — OEP.

Any presidential bid for rationing would need congressional approval before the blueprint became effective.

However, no one in Congress seems to be worrying aloud about rationing although there have been some mentions of the possibility of going back to wage-price controls.

Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., says he sees no likelihood of wage-price action by Congress this session "although pressure for it will be building up." And Sen. George D. Aiken, R-Vt., says any substantial broadening of the war will require more controls because of "soft spots in the economy."

A spokesman for the National Association of Manufacturers said that organization has given no thought to the return of controls. More emphatic was a spokesman for the President's Council of Economic Advisers who said the need for them is "as close to zero as you can get."

Still, OEP is ready to go if the wind changes.

Materials from which ration stamps and books could be printed are in standby storage right now in many parts of the country. Their existence isn't a secret but people are forever "discovering" it and raising concern about any imminent return of rationing.

When such a flap arises OEP explains that this is just preparedness material, put out at the local level because in a future war there might not be time to distribute it from Washington.

Should a really big war come, coordination of all nonmilitary mobilization would be centralized in the Office of Defense Resources, an agency that now exists just on paper. The head man would be America's "mobilization czar," an OEP official said.

By presidential order, OEP and other federal agencies engaged in preparedness planning draw up their proposals to meet emergencies on an ascending scale. At the bottom is "international tension" then limited war, general war, and finally national attack.

Some of the preparations for this last category strike a grim note in a nation which has escaped serious invasion since the War of 1812;

— To help wandering and homeless families find missing loved ones after an attack the Post Office Department has in readiness a registration system that in effect would be a refugee tracer service.

— The Federal Reserve Board has stored $18 billion in new bills in vaults around the country to keep the currency in circulation at normal levels for two years in case the Bureau of Engraving is destroyed.

— More than 2,600 packaged disaster hospitals have been stored throughout the country. When uncrated, each contains everything needed for a 200-bed hospital except the building.

— Several hundred radio stations are receiving fallout protection for their transmitters so they could remain on the air after an attack. These same stations are receiving emergency power generators — a number of which got a workout in the big 1965 blackout.

— The $6.8-billion stockpile of strategic and critical materials includes 180,000 pounds of opium to be used in pain-relieving drugs after any nuclear attack.

The stockpile is a group of 77 minerals, pharmaceuticals and other substances stored against the possibility of wartime shortage. One thing that isn't stockpiled is food-basics such as flour.

While plans in the "national attack" category may never get a tryout, some at the limited war level are in use now.

The Business and Defense Services Administration, a unit within the Department of Commerce, has for about two years been managing war production by following the procedures it had framed years before.

It makes the decisions that expedites one defense order at the expense of another when both carry priorities. Because of the Vietnam buildup it is being called on to intervene in 9,000 such priority logjams a year.

OEP's $7-million budget and $4 million for related agencies, plus the proposed $111-million budget of the Office of Civil Defense, are the major units in $122 million annually for federal departments engaged in nonmilitary preparedness planning.

Tin Can Reminising

By ROBERT W. WELLS
in the Christian Science Monitor

Among the failures of my generation is one that the philosophers generally overlook: Our inability to inform our children of the usefulness of empty tin cans.

The knowledge of what to do with them seems to have vanished, along with such skills as banking a coal furnace or cranking a Model T. There are plenty of tin cans around, as anyone who has visited a picnic site can testify, but once they're emptied their usefulness is over. In the old days, it had often just begun.

The simplest use for an empty container then was a game called kick the can. One boy could kick the can all by himself. He would give it a boot, then stroll along, hands in pockets, and kick it again.

If he had a friend with him, the game was livelier. One boy would kick it, then race the other for the honor of kicking it again. Played solo or even in pairs, it wasn't really much of a game, except that the flattened can made the kind of noise that annoyed the adults, which was reason enough for its popularity.

Shinny was another use for an empty tin can. The dictionary claims that shinny or shinney is a rude version of ice hockey. Apparently whoever wrote the definition grew up in a different neighborhood than mine. Where I lived, shinny was played on a gravel road. If it was played on a frozen pond, it was called shinny-onna-ice.

The can was used in place of a puck. First it had to be flattened by jumping on it repeatedly, preferably by the boy called "Fats." Then lines were scratched across the ice at each end of the pond to serve as goals. The idea was to knock the tin can across the line by hitting it with a stick picked up in the woods.

Sometimes a boy would hunt around until he found a limb that was bent at the end to form a natural version of a hockey stick, but this wasn't necessary. It was never a game taken very seriously - it wasn't really a disgrace if your team lost, the way it was to lose a game of baseball. The rules were whatever the boy with the loudest voice said they were, although it was not considered friendly to clout an opponent unless you were aiming at the flattened can.

The game was supposed to be played on skates - shinny-onna-ice, that is, as distinguished from shinny - but if a boy was hanging around the fire built near the pond without his skates he could serve as goalie.

Sometimes if you'd left your skates at home, a friend would lend you one of his. Then you'd each travel with a step and a glide, a step and a glide.

Another use for an empty tin can required one that was still solid on both ends, such as the kind that had contained evaporated milk. It was placed with one side flat on the ground. The foot was raised high and the heel of the shoe stamped down hard on it.

In this was done exactly right, the can was bent to conform to the shape of the heel, so it would stick to it while you walked. With a can fastened to the rear of each shoe, a boy could clump up and down a concrete sidewalk, making a truly remarkable racket.

Parents would come roaring out on porches. Neighbors would slam windows shut. An afternoon that had been monotonous would suddenly crackle with shouted threats and impending violence.

I can hear it now, the clunk and scrape and clatter of a small boy marching down a walk with tin on his heels, but only in memory. The sound has vanished, the invention of the unsung genius who first realized an empty can could be fastened to a boy's shoe heel has been lost to the world. The old skills have been allowed to die out among the young, which may explain why so many double-ended cans gleam in the headlights' beams along the rural roadsides. In the old days, the adults hid them carefully away. The knew that unless they did, some lad would go clanking and scraping past the window in triumph.

A YOUNG MAN SPEAKS

I am a soldier now, and should I die
Where alien winds blow over alien lands,
Where strange white stars bejewel a stranger sky,
And nameless seas caress the nameless sands,
Remember I am youth, and all my years
Are but a dot where should have been a line.
I've been denied the chance to carry on,
To do the good I might have done on earth.
My dreams but dreams, no fruit to bear at dawn,
No children ever now to come to birth.
And so I ask your pledge:
Let freedom reign;
Let not my life be sacrificed in vain.

Five Towns May Get Toll-Free Phone Calls

CAPE GIRARDEAU - Scott City, Chaffee, Benton, Oran and Delta will have additional telephone service by early 1969 if the telephone customers there approve a proposal by Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

That proposal will eliminate toll charges between these cities with only a slight increase in monthly rates, J. W. Smith, Southwestern Bell manager, said.

It is part of an over-all program instigated by the Missouri Public Service Commission to eliminate all 10-cent toll calls. Southwestern Bell will send all telephone subscribers in these areas public - opinion postcards soon. Initiation of the new service will depend upon results of the survey.

Southwestern Bell plans to offer toll-free calls from Chaffee to Scott City, Benton, Oran and Delta. In turn, telephone customers in those four cities may call Chaffee toll-free.

Extended area service also will include toll-free calls between Scott City and Benton, plus Delta and Oran.

"The new service will eliminate long-distance charges on more than 73,000 calls placed annually between these cities," Smith explained.

He cited one example where Chaffee customers who can now call only 1,400 other customers toll-free will be able to call 5,600 telephones toll-free under the new plan.

Smith said this new service will involve laying new underground cables. A similar toll-free service between Cape Girardeau, Scott City and Jackson went into effect in November.

Fire Razes Independence Landmark

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. AP - A tremendous explosion and fire destroyed a major part of the old block-long Waggoner-Gates Milling Co., building in Independence Monday afternoon.

The loss was estimated at $700,000 to $1 million.

One of Jackson County's oldest landmarks, the original part of the Waggoner flour mill had stood since 1860. Most of the original mill, built with foot-square oak timbers, collapsed after flames burned out the interior.

The six-acre mill site is six blocks southwest of the Independence square.

The explosion knocked out windows of business buildings on the north side of the square. Windows in houses north of the plant were shattered.

Witnesses said the metal roof of the building was blown several hundred feet into the air and scattered like paper. Flames shot upward immediately and were out of control when firemen arrived.

Fire Chief Thomas Pollard said something might have touched off a dust explosion.

Charles V. Shoemaker, foreman of the milling company, was at his home just north of the mill. He said he saw lightning strike the head house of the five-story elevator.

"I was standing in the front yard and saw lightening," Shoemaker said. "It had a pretty fire on it. It hit the head house and blew out the front of the house. It went ablaze and then everything went up."

The head house atop the elevator contained machinery.

Michael Selders, one of the owners, said the mill contained 220,000 bushels of wheat, corn and milo.

Air Force to Freeze Many On Active Duty

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The Air Force, pinched for veteran pilots and other seasoned officers, has announced a move to freeze on active duty up to 3,700 regulars who want to retire or resign from the service.

Delays in such retirements or resignations will last up to a year and will apply to officers from colonel on down, the Air Force said.

It announced that each case will be handled individually under a procedure put into effect on last Thursday.

"This action is being taken to assure a continuing source of experienced officers needed throughout the Air Force," the statement said, "and to enable the Air Force to meet future requirements for officers having needed skills."

Nothing was said in the statement about a pilot shortage, but the Air Force has had to transfer many veteran pilots from desk jobs back to the cockpit in order to meet the enlarged needs growing out of the air war in Vietnam.

Jones Doesn't Vote on 5 Bills

Missourians Favor Warning About Cigarettes

COLUMBIA -- In recent years, public health specialists have intensified the campaign to discourage smoking. They have advocated two approaches in the campaign: (1) reducing the demand for tobacco, and (2) limiting the supply of tobacco.

As pointed out in the last Missouri Poll, the campaign to reduce the demand for tobacco has not been characterized by any widespread success. Although cigarette sales fell as much as 30 per cent following U.S. Surgeon General Luther Terry's release of reports linking cigarette smoking to lung cancer and a variety of other diseases, cigarette sales have now returned to all-time highs. In Missouri, virgually all smokers have heard about the Terry reports but have decided the reports either are untrue or simply don't apply to them. Only a handful of former smokers trace their decision to stop smoking to the Terry reports.

Consequently, many public health specialists argue for the other alternative. If people are not willing to reduce or stop their smoking voluntarily and if smoking is harmful to their health, the argument runs, then the government must in effect impose a quarantine. Exposure to tobacco or the encouragements to use tobacco must be reduced by governmental action.

Such action must, at some point or another, involve the United States Congress. But the Congress has generally been thought to favor tobacco - related interests. Twenty-five states raise tobacco, and Congressmen and Senators from states where tobacco is a major industry have been entrenched in committee and floor leadership positions for many years. The tobacco industry contributes heavy subsidies to the fields of entertainment, advertising, and mass media -- all important sectors of other states' economies.

When the Federal Trade Commission sought to require a warning on cigarette packages indicating the smoking - lung cancer linkage, in accord with the Terry report recommendations, Congress overrode the FTC's authority by providing a substantially weaker directive. The Congress also refused to fund a U.S. Public Health Service request for $1.9 million for research and education on why people smoke and how to help them stop or keep them from starting.

At the time Congress made these decisions, it had only limited information about the kinds of controls that people wanted imposed on the tobacco industry.

In an effort to find out the extent to which Missourians advocate or accept governmental controls eliminating or limiting the supply of cigarettes, the Public Opinion Survey Unit asked its statewide sample of nearly 1,000 adults a series of questions on the subject. The questions were paraphrased from a series of proposals for tobacco regulation introduced in recent sessions of the Congress. They were asked its statewide sample of nearly 1,000 adults a series of questions on the subject. The questions were paraphrased from a series of proposals for tobacco regulation introduced in recent sessions of the Congress. They were asked to "agree" or "disagree" with each statement. The results for the adult Missouri sample are presented below, the scores for present smokers are presented in parentheses.

Proposal, Agree, Disagree, and Don't Know

Cigarette advertising should be limited so it is less likely to reach children and teen-agers.

The Missouri Poll is in the following order:

Proposal, Agree, Disagree, Don't Know.

Cigarette advertising should be limited so it is less likely to reach children and teen-agers.

72%	23%	5%
(67)	(28)	(5)

Cigarette packages, tobacco tins, and so forth should have labels on them warning people that smoking may be harmful to health.

66%	26%	8%
(60)	(33)	(7)

The government should increase its publicity to warn people that smoking is dangerous to health.

66%	28%	6%
(59)	(36)	(5)

Cigarette sales should be like liquor; nobody under 21 should be permitted to buy them.

65%	28%	7%
(62)	(33)	(5)

Cigarette advertisements on TV and in the papers should warn people that smoking may be harmful to health.

60%	33%	7%
(53)	(40)	(7)

Cigarette packages should have specific warnings that smoking may cause lung cancer and other diseases.

58%	33%	9%
(51)	(41)	(8)

The tobacco industry should be forced to come up with a "safe" cigarette, or else take its product off the market.

44%	41%	15%
(33)	(53)	(14)

Tobacco growers get farm subsidies and price supports. These should be withdrawn.

(29)	(55)	(16)

The table indicates that large majorities of the Missouri population would support most of the proposed regulations. Generally, twice as many respondents support the regulations compared with those who oppose them. The strongest support comes on regulations which would limit the supply or the desire for tobacco among new smokers (children) and on the more vague warnings about the general health hazard involved in smoking. Support is reduced somewhat as the proposed regulations become more specific about the nature of the health hazard. Support moves well under the 50 percent mark when the proposals call for coercive or punitive governmental action; in fact, in the case of withdrawal of farm subsidies to tobacco growers, opposition outweighs support.

If the attitudes of present smokers alone are examined (49 percent of the sample), even then support outweighs opposition on all proposed regulations except the two most punitive ones.

It would appear that as far as Missouri residents are concerned, the Congress could enact or administrative agencies could impose a series of controls designed to limit the supply and demand for tobacco, with only a limited threat of popular opposition reaching majority proportions. Opposition is most likely to come from tobacco users. Nevertheless, the government cannot move with impunity in the area; if the action would threaten to deprive individuals of a share of their livelihood, or if it overturned long - established behavior patterns, opposition in majority proportions would likely emerge.

WHAT IS IMPORTANT

Lord, give me a heart that often sings,
And finds great joy in little things;
The song of a bird, the smell of a rose;
A gentle breeze that playfully blows;
A savory meal with loved ones dear;
The sound of a church bell sweet and clear;
A mother's love, a child's caress;
These are the things that truly bless.

Liquor Bill Clears Senate Committee

JEFFERSON CITY AP - A Senate committee reported favorably Tuesday a bill to permit sale of liquor by the drink at plush lake resorts and large suburban restaurants.

The controversial measure squeezed through the House last week by a close margin after being defeated previously.

It would affect several Lake of the Ozarks resorts and some at Bull Shoals and Table Rock reservoirs. Only resorts on lakes with a shoreline of at least 250 miles could qualify.

Meanwhile the powerful Senate Economics Committee continued to cling to several major bills, including some of the governor's recommendations.

Still stuck in the committee are bills to establish a new state agency on tourism, a community affairs department, a bill to let unemployed fathers live at home without endangering their families aid to independent children and one to extend the food stamp plan on a statewide basis.

The House killed a bill that would have given local agents of the Department of Revenue 2 per cent of the sales tax they collect on such things as automobiles.

The extra money would be in addition to the fees they now collect from purchasers of automobile title, driver licenses and so on.

The measure was brought up for House consideration from its position on what was supposed to be a calendar of non-controversial bills.

But opposition developed at once.

An effort was made to get the author, Rep. J. R. Wells, D-Centerview, to lay the bill over until some further information could be obtained from the Department of Revenue. The office was not open on this holiday.

Wells refused and the bill was defeated 55-84.

He said it would save the state money but opponents said it could only result in a drain on sales tax receipts.

The House passed and sent to the Senate a bill letting local school districts levy a special tax for the transportation of students to a state supported junior or senior college or university.

It was offered by Rep. Charles Dickey, D-Mexico. The Mexico school district has been providing transportation of its students to and from the University of Missouri at Columbia. The cost has been met by subscriptions from Mexico businessmen.

A few members questioned its constitutionality but others said it was a novel way of meeting the need for higher education.

Rep. James I. Spainhower, D-Marshall, said his education committee was "genuinely enthusiastic about it. It is an innovation that can do no harm and could do a lot of good."

Spainhower pointed out the residents of a school district would have the right to vote on it and to decide what state-supported school would be used.

Monday the House advanced a bill to let the legislature set hunting and fishing fees.

Rep. E. J. Cantrell, D-Overland, House appropriations chairman introduced the first installment of the final catch-all or omnibus bill.

It carries minor routine appropriations for state agencies and to meet some state obligations.

He said the committee probably would make extensive additions during its consideration.

The second and last installment of the catch-all bill, he said, will come in the final days of the session and will include the money to finance any new or expanded programs enacted by this session of the legislature.

Remap Bills Pondered by Committee

JEFFERSON CITY AP - The House Committee on Congressional Redistricting took up the annual hassle Monday night, hearing all of the Senate and House bills that would line up new districts for U.S. congressmen.

It is a political hot potato. Republicans, Democrats, and St. Louis Democrats have all formed factions and are trying to figure out how they can come out best.

Rep. Harold L. Holliday, D-Kansas City, sponsored a House bill that would make two congressional districts out of St. Louis county. As it stands now there are three congressmen who have part of their district in St. Louis city or St. Louis county.

Holliday is president of the state NCAAP, an attorney, and an influential member of the House. His redistricting plan would give the Negro population of St. Louis a chance to elect the first Negro congressman from Missouri.

Holliday said he understands from the Supreme Court decision that Missouri's congressional districts do not meet the one-man one-vote requirement and that the court also says districts should be contiguous and compact.

"Some limitations on gerrymandering have to be made," Holliday said.

He also reminded the committee that the session is drawing to an end and said some concessions would have to be made by everyone.

"It is not reasonable to think all 163 members of the House will go for any plan," he added. "If we had 163 members draw a map for congressional redistricting we would have 163 different maps," Halliday emphasized.

Sen. Omer H. Avery, D-Troy, presented his plan that had passed the senate earlier.

When questioned by Rep. Thomas A. Walsh, D-St. Louis, a member of the House Committee, Avery said, "We want St. Louis county and they don't want us."

Ever since the Supreme Court decision reapportionment has been a problem in the Missouri Legislature.

The Missouri House, Senate and the congressional districts were all redistricted during the last session and resulted in bitter political disputes.

The congressional redistricting was the only one that was ruled out of line when the U. S. Supreme Court upheld a federal court edict.

If the general assembly is not able to reach an agreement during this session, which ends June 30, then either a special session will have to be called by the governor or all congressmen will have to run at large.

Stock Market Cycles Risky to Follow

NEW YORK (AP) — The proud boast so often heard that the war in Vietnam is one that the nation's huge economy can accommodate with little effort is being shown more and more today to be highly inflated with air.

It is a small war relative to a big economy, but it is having its effect.

Vietnam will cost something more than $22 billion this coming fiscal year, less than 3 per cent of the gross national product of about $765 billion. But this financially "easy" war contributed to inflation last year and it might force a general tax hike this year. That is impact.

The budget deficit, it now appears, will top any previous deficit, totaling perhaps $30 billion, a good deal of it the result of the Vietnam war.

And, since the budget deficit will be potentially inflationary, pressure has increased for a cut in federal domestic spending. Parts of the Great Society, including the slogan, could become victims.

There is no question, therefore, that Vietnam is having its impact; no nation can afford such spending without consequences.

Vietnam is, however, only a fraction of our total commitment to military or defense spending. President Johnson's budget provides for $73 billion to be so spent, a figure that likely will swell.

Since projections for the gross national product, the total of a nation's goods and services, range from $740 billion to $790 billion for the year, defense spending still is likely to be no more at any time than about 10 per cent of GNP.

In the Korean War, when defense expenditures were lower, they represented a far higher percentage of gross national product, which then was about $265 billion. Again, although Vietnam is big in relation to Korea, it is smaller than Korea in relation to GNP.

It is this enormous size of the American production machine, many times larger than most other nations, that hides much of Vietnam's impact. But that impact is there. There is no debate about it.

What is still debatable is the extent of the pressure on the economy. Some critics of the administration maintain the pressure could have been lessened if the costs had been foreseen and arrangements made earlier for paying the bills.

It is possible that under perfect administering, and with a lot of luck, the impact could have been nearly hidden. This would have assumed more accurate projections of expenditures and better timing on fiscal measures meant to hold down inflation.

As it is, we have found that prices are higher than housewives are willing to pay and probably will go higher; interest rates are under upward pressure again after reaching 40-year highs last year; high mortgage rates are delaying a forecasted housing boom.

Perhaps as a consequence of tight money and rising rates, stock prices plunged last year and some blue chips remain depressed. The stock decline, in a limited sense, can therefore be blamed partly on Vietnam.

Some economists say, in defense of administration efforts, that the fact the economy still continues to support Americans in a manner that neither they nor any other people have ever before enjoyed is compliment enough to the administration's wisdom. Even in nonwar years, they say, we have had high taxes and interest, inflation and housing problems.

A big concern of the economists, however, is that should there be a further buildup in Vietnam—or another flareup in Korea or the Mideast—the rise in defense spending will corner more and more of the nation's productivity.

A war economy is a distant threat, but its consequences—as we have seen—sometimes are felt in advance.

An elderly lady, anxious to be approved for residence in a new retirement village, filled out the application with a bit of anxiety. She answered the questions on the state of her health and then signed her name and address. After zip, she wrote firmly: "Normal."

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The telephones in Kellam deForest's office rang busily.

"Gunsmoke" wanted to know: Could an Indian testify at a court trial in Kansas in 1875? He could.

"I Spy" asked: How is milk delivered to hotels in Morrocco? Answer: in big cans, as in America.

DeForest, 40, wiry and intense, a distant cousin of the late inventor Dr. Lee deForest, is a fast fact-finder to the television industry. He is also a professional nit-picker who finds flaws in scripts.

A "Star Trek" scenario discovered a planet without variations in surface temparature. In a seven-page analysis finding 52 points technical-minded viewers might challenge in this script alone, deForest reported: "A planet without variations in surface temperature is impossible."

With two woman assistants, deForest, a former Yale history major, operates in what used to be the RKO Studio library, now part of the Desilu TV empire.

Five thousand reference books range from "Games and Songs of American Children" to "Executions—Legal Ways of Death Throughout the World." Table and shelves are piled high with magazines, 80 file drawers contain photos of almost anything imaginable, and the 1910 Encyclopedia Brittanica gets more use than the current edition.

"I wanted to get into show business but found you can't get anywhere in this town without something to sell," says deForest, whose only competitors are the major movie studios' libraries. "With the rise of television, I could see there was going to be a need for this service."

Since 1951 he has served 38 TV series, the present dozen including "Get Smart," "Wild, Wild West," "Hogan's Heroes," "Big Valley" and Lucy. Charges are on a per-show or hourly basis.

The phones ring. Which college graduated the most U.S. presidents? Answer: Harvard—5. Who won the Kentucky Derby in 1916? George Smith. Who wrote "Rigoletto"?

"Verdi, in 1851," replied Mrs. Joan Pearce, one of deForest's assistants. The producer hummed a tune over the phone and asked her to identify it. "La Donna e Mobile," she said.

Part of deForest Research's service is ascertaining that characters in scripts don't bear real people's names, to forestall suits or simple embarrassment.

A character in the Navy-oriented "Star Trek" was to be "Adm. Westervliet." Said Mrs. Pearce: "We recommended a change because in the Navy today there is a Capt. Westervliet. We try to protect people who might get ribbed about it."

Another call. "Did children in the old West have toy balloons?"

"We'll have to work on that," said deForest.

EVERY 4TH NEW HOME HAS CENTRAL AIR CONDITIONING

One out of every four new homes being built today has central air conditioning, the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau reports.

One reason for this is the great increase in the cooling of "public" buildings such as stores, theaters and restaurants, as well as factories, offices and other places of employment. The American family is exposed to comfort cooling both at work and at play, and its members don't want to go home to a sweltering house.

Air conditioning enthusiasts point to health advantages too. Doctors often recommend it for hay fever and allergy sufferers and heart patients.

Half asleep, in the early hours of the morning, I stumbled to answer an insistent pounding at the door and was stunned to see my wife -- rain-soaked and tear-stained -- accompanied by an exasperated policeman who asked, "Do you know this dame, mister? She says she lives here." When I convinced him that she was my wife, he threw me a sympathic look and left.

I then realized that my wife was wearing an old trenchcoat over her nightgown and was clutching a flashlight. Finally, after tears and laughter ceased, she told me what had happened. "Trouble," our wayward cat, had not come home that night. When the patrolman discovered my wife, said worried spouse was searching the block, peering into bushes and under cars.

The officer's understandable suspicion of her character -- in view of her actions and attire -- was clinched when he asked her what she was up to.

Without thinking, she had blurted hysterically, "I'm looking for Trouble."

Economic Effects of Viet War Becoming Pronounced

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — Does the stock market have a consistent rather than erratic pattern of highs and lows, its high months and its low months, its periods of wild bulls and hibernating bears?

Any believer in cycles — and there are millions of them with millions of pieces of data to show millions of patterns — will answer positively. But not everyone believes in cycles.

Nevertheless, some evidence seems to have accumulated that there is a good chance the market will rise in January, April, July and October, the first months of the new quarters, barring any sharp drop in the general economy.

In between, in the months of February, March and May for instance, prices may remain weak or even slump.

Now, to state a stock market theory is to have it contradicted very shortly afterward, and there is no assurance that this one will have a long life. It does, though, seem to have as much validity as the hemline theory — that stock averages rise or fall with female hemlines — or the sun spot theories, or the myriad theories computed from averages.

There has never been an absence of such theories, for the inability to predict how the mass of stock-buying people will act is the common factor that makes stock forecasting the game and business it is and not the science its market letter writers strive for.

However, the tendency has been for many of these, once stated, to become so entwined in their own logic and developed to such an intricacy that they are just about unworkable. Not so the three-month cycle.

As stated by Philip A. Cavalier, senior analyst for a big brokerage house, the pattern has appeared fairly regularly and logically when not disturbed by extreme economic or political news.

The reason, he states, is that early in these months of January, April, July and October the majority of companies report their earnings for the previous three months. The government also reports on the general economy. Given a hard numerical report of performance, and not just another estimate or rumor, buyers come into the market.

Thereafter, as uncertainty develops during the next two months the buyers remain safely on the sidelines. With demand weak, prices fall.

If this reasoning is sound it provokes the thought that in buying on past news, rather than on some evidence of future gains, a lot of market theories seem to be contradicted. But this seeming contradiction is not quite that; the past is merely used as assurance of the future.

Uncertainty is the key word in understanding this interpretation of mass psychology. Buyers are uncertain of the future but, in having some proof of past performance, they are willing to gamble it will continue for another quarter at least.

Cigarette Causes Death of Boy

GOODFELLOW TERRACE, Mo. AP - A 17-year-old boy was burned to death Monday on a couch which St. Louis county police said was set afire by a cigarette.

Police identified the victim as Robert O. Trentmann, of Goodfellow Terrace, a St. Louis suburb.

Police reported the boy's parents were out of town and said the fire smoldered for a long time before breaking out in flames.

An American missionary and his family were returning from the former French Camerouns, West Africa. So that the children would not look conspicuous in homemade, native clothes, the mother outfitted them in the latest fashion from a mail - order catalogue. But they soon betrayed their background. As the family walked along a street in paris, a stopover on their homeward journey, the parents realized that everyone was staring at them. Turning around, they discovered that the two little ones who trailed behind were casually walking along, carrying their suitcases on their heads.

Food Costs: Excellent Now, But Outlook Is For Change, Freeman Says

Consumers, says Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman, never had it so good. But, he warns, it may not continue that way.

At a recent meeting with editors and writers of consumer-oriented publications, Secretary Freeman pointed out that consumers are enjoying an ever-diminishing demand on their take-home pay for food.

Consumers now spend only about 18 percent of their take-home pay for food. Ten years ago it took nearly 21 percent to feed a family. Twenty years ago one-fourth of a paycheck went for food.

If the percentage of take-home pay were the same today as it was in 1947 (25 percent), it would cost a family of four about $780 more for food in a year.

Another way of looking at the consumer's unmatched purchasing power is to consider how long it takes to earn enough money to purchase a week's food needs.

In just one 8-hour day, a worker can earn enough to buy food for his family for a week. Twenty years ago it took 13 hours of work.

Interestingly, diets have improved and Americans are eating more. . . despite this decrease in cost. In the last 10 years, food consumption per capita has increased 2-1/2 percent. A larger percentage of quality foods are being consumed now than ever before, too.

The problem is, Secretary Freeman points out, that farmers are not getting a fair share of today's economy.

Admittedly food prices are higher than they were 20 years ago, but food prices and farm prices are completely different things.

Farm prices - the prices paid to farmers for their products on the farm - are 5 to 7 percent lower than 20 years ago. What's more, the farmers' portion of each dollar spent on food in the store is less today than in 1947.

Essentially farmers are earning two-thirds of what non-farmers earn. Yet they are producing a great abundance of quality food at modest retail prices. One farm worker today can provide the food and fiber needs of about 40 people; 10 years ago he could supply only 23 people.

Freeman warns that farm prices that are "ironically and incongruously low in today's otherwise booming economy" could destroy the family farm system that has brought the consumer such a modestly-priced, nutritious food abundance.

"Consumers must realize," he continued, "that if farm prices are not strengthened, the nation's family farm system could be replaced by corporate operations that conceivably could so control food supply as to demand and get any price they want.

"Of course, we all - as consumers - would like to pay less for food. But if we stop to think, we all must realize that modest food costs will not cannot - be assured if farmers continue to be underpaid.

"I'm sure consumers are willing to pay a little more for food now to avoid paying a lot more in the future."

Four Killed in Plane Crash

MARSHALL, Mo. AP - Four persons were killed Monday in a light plane that crashed into a fog-obscured television tower while they were on their way to the Indianapolis automobile race.

The victims, all from the Kansas City area, were Donald L. Hainworth, 40; his son, Jack, 15; Clarence Goodrich, 45, and Thomas L. Potter, 18. The elder Hainworth held a flight instructor's license.

The plane plowed into the 540-foot tower two miles north of Marshall. The tower is part of a cable television system serving the city.

Chester Griffitt, 52, who lives a half-mile from the scene, said drizzling rain and fog hid the two upper warning lights on the tower and the plane hit it about 450 feet from the ground.

"I heard the engine speed up as if the pilot saw the tower and tried to get away from it," Griffitt said. "But a wing hit the tower and the plane spun around and crashed about 100 yards away."

The upper sections of the tower toppled to the ground.

The coroner, Dr. B. F. Knipschild, said the victims died instantly.

TEACH ME TO PRAY

OFTEN within a morning hour
Or when the twilight time was blue,
They heard Him pray and felt such power,
Such dedication flowing through
His words that one faith-gloried day
They said, "Teach us to pray."

Oh, that your witnessing and mine
May show such victory and light,
Such fellowship with the Divine
That someone longing for the bright,
Transforming peace of God will say,
"Teach me to pray."

All Wonders

IF YOU were about to be cast adrift at sea, and to end up on a desert island, what books would you take?

Well, I find myself cast adrift for six weeks with little "favorite reading material" and my religious library consisting of a Gospel according to St. John and a Salvation Army songbook.

At home there would be the whole Bible in several translations, commentaries and other reference books, current religious magazines and newspapers -- far, far too much.

One has actually to go no farter than the beginning of the Gospel of St. John to find the truth and good news of Christ expressed concisely, tersely and clearly.

"In the beginning was the Word . . . and the Word was God . . . and the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us . . . full of grace and truth."

And now the centuries have passed and we can say, "The Word was made flesh and dwells among us, full of grace and truth."

The remarkable thing about this extraordinary happening is that it is no respecter of persons. The Word may become incarnate in the body of a village carpenter, a fisherman, a doctor, a scrubwoman, a young graduate nurse -- anyone who elects to become a member of Christ's family.

And His incarnation is at once evident, not by any words, or profession or vocal witness, but by the aura of grace which surround such a life and by the truth which shines through it.

These words continue to come from the narrowed focus of hospital life.

So when I think of the Word made flesh, I think of those near to me here -- those who share for a little while this experience of sickness, of pain, of recovery or of death.

Right now it is late at night. My newly arrived roommate is a very ill woman. By day she chooses not to know how ill she is, but at night the guards of her mind go off duty and the horrors of the night rush in upon her soul.

It was very bad last night. She fought to escape "commitment to the earth."

The West Indian nurse abandoned her professional training in one swift, decisive transition.

"Are you a Christian, Mrs. Ryan?"

"Yes, I am."

"You believe in God?"

"Yes, I do."

"You believe God loves you and is concerned with what happens to you?"

"I have tried to believe that . . ."

"Well, now is the time for you to prove that you do believe what you have said in church. God does care, God is here, and He can now do for you what you can't do for yourself. So lie back, Mrs. Ryan, and just rest in His love."

And mysteriously, gently, yet in great strength, God's grace and truth were present in that room -- available through the Word made flesh in one of His loving children, and rest and sleep came to a tortured soul.

Sister Rebecca is old, just how old nobody knows -- but she must be well over 80. Once she held a high administrative position in the hospital; now she serves wherever there is a need.

Her special grace is to see what needs to be done within the scope of her powers. To notice a drooping plant and come with water. To look in a room and see a discouraged, downcast patient, and to know exactly the right word to say. To be able to convey to the sick, without exactly putting it in so many words, that God's grace is not confined within the sacred elements and that His presence may reach those who need it.

Day by day, hour by hour, in delightfully surprising ways we see the miracle of miracles occur, the wonder of wonders fulfilled -- the Word made flesh and dwelling in our very midst, full of grace and radiant in truth.

Drew Pearson Special

DREW PEARSON AND JACK ANDERSON SAY:

Prima Donna from Oregon guts education bill; male members of house must learn to pamper lady member from Oregon; Justice Department sits on big pipeline antitrust case.

WASHINGTON -- After a torn and tattered aid-to-education bill finally emerged from a 2 a.m. house debate, it was remarked in the democratic cloackroom that the administration could have won had it not been for the change in life of Edith Green.

They were referring to the fact that the Oregon democrat had deserted the democratic party and teamed up with the Dixiecrats and Republicans in gutting her own committee's bill.

More and more over the years, Mrs. Green has become one of the unexplained mysteries of Washington politics. A highly intelligent, able woman in her late fifties with long experience in government, Mrs. Green now takes a conspiratorial view of the world. She thinks everyone is ganging up against her -- except in recent weeks the Republicans and Dixiecrats.

She engaged in a running duel with the other lady from Oregon, Sen. Maurine Neuberger, until the latter retired. She has been scarcely speaking to Sen. Wayne Morse, another Oregon democrat, who has campaigned for her reelection in the past.

There was a time when Mrs. Green was a great admirer of Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, former chairman of her education and labor committee. Some colleagues wisecracked that there was romance between them. Undoubtedly Adam knew how to handle the "Gentle lady from Oregon" better than the present chairman, courtly Kentuckian Carl Perkins. He knew how to crack down on Edith. Once when she broke her word to him he promptly fired her sister from the committee payroll.

--PERSONAL PRIDE--

Once factor which contributed to the gutted condition of the aid-to-education bill was committee seniority. Thanks to seniority, Rep. Roman Pucinski of Chicago inherited the subcommittee on public school education.

But, because he had not served on the subcommittee before, the main job of piloting the bill through the house was given to Rep. John Brademas of South Bend, Ind., who ranked second. Brademas is one of the ablest members of the committee. But he did not defer to Mrs. Green.

On a previous occasion Esther Peterson, assistant secretary of labor, asked Rep. Frank Thompson, D-N.J., to introduce a bill for equal pay for women. Thompson suggested that since Mrs. Green had long pioneered for women's economic rights, she handle the bill. But Mrs. Green, at that time, felt the bill did not represent her views. She declined.)

Thompson then proceeded to hold hearings, put the bill in final shape and get full committee approval. In doing so he announced: "I suggest that this bill is something the gentle lady from Oregon might well handle on the floor of the house."

Mrs. Green accepted the invitation, introduced the bill as her own and piloted it through the house of representatives with flying colors. She made no mention of the fact that Thompson of New Jersey had done all the work.

Had Messrs. Perkins, Pucinski and Brademas given Mrs. Green the job of floor-managing the education bill last week, the outcome probably would have been different.

SUPPRESSED PIPELINE CASE

New Attorney General Ramsey Clark, who is following his daddy's vigorous trustbusting career, doesn't know that there is an important antitrust case gathering dust in his files.

It involves the biggest liquid petroleum pipeline in the world--Colonial - running from Texas through the south up through Virginia to New Jersey, a total of 1540 miles. Night and day it pulsates millions of gallons of oil through its line -- 30 to 36 inches in diameter.

The Colonial pipeline company, with assets of $371 million, is owned by Sinclair, Cities Service, Gulf, Union of California, Continental, Texaco, Socony Mobil, American and Phillips. So far it seems able to thumb its nose at Washington.

In April, 1963, the justice department antitrust division sent Colonial a demand for documents and records dealing with the charge that other oil companies, not as mighty as the above giants, were not able to run their oil through this pipeline. For an oil pipeline is a private transport system which any company is entitled to use, just as any company is entitled to ship over a railroad.

Despite this, antitrust experts have obtained evidence that Colonial is in a private conspiracy to keep its line for the use only of its nine owners--barring particularly the small independents.

After a delay of three years, there still remains no action. Assistant Attorney General Donald Turner, a charming but complacent antitruster, has been sitting on the case despite needling from down below.

Meanwhile federal prosecutors away from Washington have been more active. This past February 23, a federal grand jury in Newark, N.J., indicted three top executives of Colonial pipeline on charges of bribing the mayor and council president of Woodbridge, N.J., to get permission to build a pipeline through a nearby area.

The Colonial pipeline officials who were indicated included Karl Feldman, executive vice president, and Glenn H. Giles, vice president for operations. When residents of Woodbridge objected to having a pipeline and storage tanks built close to them, Colonial executives simply bribed city officials, according to the grand jury indictment.

New Attorney General Ramsey Clark might well ask his subordinates to dust off his Colonial pipeline files.

Note: Justice Tom Clark Ramsey's father, recently handed down one of the toughest pipeline opinions in supreme court history regarding El Paso Natural Gas. Both Tom and Ramsey are from Texas.

Coffee Corner
by Cheri

Well, summer's here and I'm gonna play by golly - as soon as I get all my work done, that is. Every year early in the spring it seems like I break my neck to get the yard in order, the house cleaning done, the check-ups with the doctor and dentist over, the clothes all fitted and in order, and then I invariably sit down and say, "Now it's time to relax and play." Does it happen??? You can bet your botton dollar it doesn't! I've always failed to think of little items like the mumps or chicken pox, (my two always have their diseases in the summer, and never at the same time. We always manage to drag one ailment out for at least a month). Therefore, one month shot to pieces! Then, someone always calls me for a committee of some sort and while I'm frantically stammering around trying to think of a plausible excuse for not helping out, they've put my name down on their little black list, hung up the phone, and the next thing I know I'm attending a meeting to find out what my job is!

Then, ye ole conscience begins to bother me, and I think of all the parties we've been invited to during the winter and of how nice summer is for entertaining a few people, and I half-heartedly mention this to Charles, and the next thing I know, I'm having 50 people over for dinner and games. And, of course, the children, particularly Lee, who has a summer birthday, have really got their nose out of joint until I make it a point to entertain for them. Thus, the vacation is three-fourths over and I haven't relaxed yet and am not about to, as by now the flower beds and yard have gone weed-berserk and need a good cleaning and it takes at least another week to get that in order and then, I've tracked enough dirt and grass in from the yard I need to spend several days cleaning house again. And just when I think I'll sit down someone calls about a fall committee for something or other, it's time to get the boys school clothes bought and altered, and good grief - when do I get around to relaxing? A typical example of my summer fun - example, last year I told myself I was not going to let anything interfere, but was going to play golf and really get trim and tan - total time on course - four. I was going to swim every morning - total time at pool - 15. See what I mean, it's a losing battle, but you just wait - this year I've already done the cleaning, and the yard work, we've been to the doctor and the dentist, I'm not going to mention any parties to Charles, and I bet I get to sit down this summer starting right now!

Starting in just a minute, first of all I'd best check that scratchy throat Brete just came in complaining about, and oh, brother, there goes the telephone!

Hearnes Rules Out Interest In Third Party

GREENVILLE, S. C. (AP) -- Gov. Warren E. Hearnes Monday ruled out any chance of his entering into a third political party with the idea of ousting President Lyndon B. Johnson.

The governor made his remarks in a speech prepared for the Democratic governors' $100 a-plate dinner here.

He said he believes the president has "made increasing efforts to listen to and understand" the problems of state government since the governors' meeting at White Sulpher Springs, W. Va. last year.

A longtime critic of the Johnson administration, Hearnes said, "I feel today, more than ever before, that President Johnson is willing to discuss our mutual federal-state problems, and I am confident that we are working toward our desired goal of true partnership between state capitals and Washington."

In a remark obviously aimed at the presidential aspirations of George Wallace, former governor of Alabama, Hearnes said:

"I do not intend to withdraw from the Democratic party on this issue, or any other ... One of the greatest mistakes we can make when a battle is lost is to withdraw and be merely a critic, or join a splinter group chipped from the solid structure that has withstood wars, depressions and severe crises of every kind.

"If we lose a battle, let us not desert, but continue the fight as participants in the unending and larger conflict."

Wallace has indicated he might lead a third party in his 1968 presidential bid.

I love criticism, just so long as it's unqualified praise.

Mideast Crisis Has Multitude of Issues

By JAMES MARLOW
AP News Analyst

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Middle East is a can of worms, and not nice ones. It's now a mixture of hate, religious prejudice, face-saving, egotism, throne-saving, legalisms, and probably dirty tricks not yet discovered.

The ill will between Jordan's King Hussein, who got a lot of help from the United States, and Egypt's President Gamal Abdel Nasser, who got a lot of help from the Soviet Union, was so intense that on May 2 Nasser called Hussein a stooge for the American CIA.

Tuesday Nasser called him brother after Hussein traveled to Cairo to sign a mutual defense pact with him against Israel.

Hussein probably did it because he was afraid he'd lose his throne if he didn't since his Jordanians are hopping with hatred for the Israelis and full of steam for Nasser, who forced a showdown with Israel.

This was fairly typical for Nasser. Since his humiliation by the Israeli-British-French attack on Egypt in 1956, Nasser has been pretty mousy and lost prestige with the other Arab leaders.

But now, since he is in this critical situation with Israel, they have felt it necessary to rally around him, some of them probably for the same reason as Hussein's. Nasser's ego needed something like this, even within his own country, where the economy is bad and complaints were growing.

Although the Jews and the Moslem Arabs who surround them are all Semites, it's their religion which separates them. The Arabs have vowed unrelenting enmity since the Israelis set up their government in the middle of the Arab world in 1948.

Meanwhile, Moscow is giving a classic example of temperamental politics, a repeat performance.

Immediately after North Korea invaded South Korea in 1950, the U.N. Security Council went into session and passed a resolution calling for a cease-fire. This paved the way for the United States to get into the war with U.N. approval.

The Soviets might have blocked the council action then — if it had only been there. But it had been boycotting the council for months because Nationalist China was represented on the council and Moscow insisted that the newly created Red China should have the seat.

Now comes the Mideast crisis, and until Thursday, the first of June, the Nationalist Chinese delegate is the council president, a job which rotates among the 15 council members.

Although things have changed since 1950, and the Soviets and Red Chinese now are bitter enemies, Moscow still insists Red China should have Nationalist China's seat. This time the United States is urging fast action by the council to preserve peace in the Mideast. The hope is that all 15 members will approve some kind of cease-and-desist resolution.

But diplomatic sources say any agreement like that is unlikely to include the Soviet Union so long as Nationalist China has the presidency.

And Nasser, who made the Mideast crisis totally critical by banning Israeli shipping from the Gulf of Aqaba, an action President Johnson calls illegal, has tangled the crisis in legalisms.

Egypt had barred Israeli shipping from the gulf from 1948 until the war of 1956. Since then Israel has depended on U.N. peacekeeping forces in Egypt to keep the gulf open. But Nasser this month told the U.N. troops to get out and they did. Now Nasser says he wants things to be as they were before 1956—meaning Israeli shipping banned from the gulf.

And the crisis might not be half as bad as it is if Israel itself had not refused to let the U.N. peacekeeping force operate inside its territory. Nasser did and, because he did, he could order the U.N. troops out when he wished.

And nobody knows yet whether Moscow, which says it backs Nasser, cooked this up with him as a double deal: to let him regain prestige and try to force the United States, if it wants Mideast peace, to make concessions on Vietnam.

Ragan Tells Plans for New Clinic

The Sikeston area unit of the Association for retarded children met Thursday evening in the fellowship hall of the First Christian church.

The business meeting was conducted by Roy Marks, vice president.

David Ragan, administrator of the mental health clinic, spoke. He said that region IX, the eight-county area to be served by the clinic, has a population of 177,270 with 5,319 mentally retarded. Of this number, only 1,087 are receiving services in education and training.

The clinic will fill a need for diagnostic and evaluation services and specialized day care programs for those not eligible for training centers and public school special education classes.

Ragan told the group that the clinic would be in operation five days a week with a nursing staff on duty seven days a week. Forty in-patient beds are included in the clinic for those whose diagnosis may take a long time, who need specialized help or who are being referred to the child's development center of the University of Missouri or to Cardinal Glennon Children's center in St. Louis.

The beds will also be used in case of an emergency in the patient's family or by court order. The 40-patient day care center will operate five days a week and will not conflict with any community programs now in effect. Ragan said he hoped there would be volunteers to work in the day care center. A question period followed.

Refreshments were served.

The next meeting will be June 22.

LOSS OF VOICE might seem an insurmountable obstacle to continuing an acting career, but it didn't stop British actor Jack Hawkins. Cancer surgery cost Hawkins his larynx over a year ago, but he learned to talk again by gulping in air and releasing it slowly. The United Nations- Myth vs. Reality

The UN's Security Council, its General Assembly and the Secretariat are the three major organs of the world organization which have been consistently in the world political limelight. Less known are the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council and International Court of Justice. There are also a number of commissions and specialized agencies which deal with everything from the status of women, human rights and narcotics to education (UNESCO), labor (ILO), and health (WHO), to mention a few. All in all, there are 13 specialized agencies whose work is coordinated through the Economic and Social Council. While some of the work of these specialized agencies has merit and is needed for smooth functioning of international relations, there are others which have been strongly criticized. One such is UNESCO and many of its activities in the educational field. Even the most ardent UN supporter might have difficulty denying that some of the specialized agencies deal with matters and aspects of daily political, economic and cultural life which are generally left to the individual in a free and open society such as our own.

The UN Charter assigned to the Security Council the primary responsibility "for the maintenance of international peace and security" in the post - war world --the most important political function of the world organization. Membership in the Council was limited to 11 nations -- five permanent members and six rotating members elected for two-year terms by the General Assembly. To preserve the wartime alliance of the "Big Five" as a controlling factor in the world organization, the five permanent Security Council seats were assigned to China, France, Soviet Russia, the United Kingdom and the United States. The current (1964) nonpermanent members are Bolivia, Czechoslovakia, Brazil, Ivory Coast, Norway and Morocco.

As constituted, each member of the Security Council - permanent or nonpermanent - had one vote. The "Big Five" had to vote unanimously to carry an issue before the Council involving other than procedural matters. In effect, dissent by one of the big powers could block action of the Council, regardless of whether such action was good, bad or indifferent from the point of view of the United States or all other member nations. It remains a moot question whether majority rule according to accepted parliarmentary procedures could have strengthened the position of the Council.

In the atmosphere of sweetness and light that intoxicated many of our politicians and press during those victorious post-war days, it was mighty unpopular to suggest that this arrangement might actually cripple the world organization, especially if the veto power was exercised in bad faith and for ulterior motives. The creators of the UN ignored such pessimism; they had high hopes that the "Big Five" would rule jointly -- and benevolently --over a peaceful world marching toward a distant goal which, if the words of some of the more ardent supporters of the UN idea were to be believed, would lead to some kind of a paradise on earth. The intentions of the Soviets did not fit at all into this cheerful picture. As soon became apparent, Marshal Stalin had no intention of cooperating with the Western Allies. Once they had saved him and his dictatorship from destruction by Hitler, Stalin again set his sights on the overall communist objective -- an objective unchanged since the establishment of the world communist movement; the conquest of the world in the names of Marx and Lenin.

The failure of the Security Council to fulfill its function is a matter of record. The first veto was cast on February 16, 1946 by the Soviets only a few months after the San Francisco conference. The issue involved negotiations for the withdrawal of British and French troops from Lebanon and Syria. By the end of 1946, the Soviets had used the veto nine times to one Western veto, cast by France. Through 1949, the veto power had been used 45 times -- twice by France and 43 times by Russia. The record did not improve during the 'fifties and the early 'sixties. By the end of 1961, more than 100 voters had been cast - four by France, two each by Great Britain and China, and the rest, more than 90 percent of the total, by the Soviet Union. For all practical purposes, the Soviet Union had succeeded in rendering the Security Council impotent. The veto power had been used by the Soviets to prevent and postpone the admission of new members to the UN if they were of Western orientation, to hamstring early proposals concerning arms reductions, to prevent a probe of the Berlin Blockade, to table the combined British - French resolution on Suez and to stop the resolution proposed by the United States on the anti - communist uprising in Hungary, to mention only a handful of issues.

The indiscriminate application of the veto power had seriously hampered the Security Council in the performance of its assigned function. Its hands had been tied when ever the Soviet Union felt that an issue under consideration would (a) be potentially harmful to the interests of the world communist movement or, (b) strengthen or advance the cause of the western alliance.

By 1950, the United Nations had become one of the battlegrounds of the Cold War. In Europe, the allies were struggling to maintain their position in Germany. In Asia, the Chinese mainland had fallen to the Reds by default. The North Korean army was preparing its attack upon the Republic of South Korea, with full Red Chinese and Soviet backing.

At the time of the North Korean attack, the Soviet Union was boycotting the Security Council in protest against the continued presence of the Nationalist Chinese government on Formosa. In the absence of the Soviet delegate, the Security Council approved the suggested American measures for the defense of South Korea against the Red invaders.

The so-called "police action" in Korea is still being hailed as one of the most spectacular achievements of the UN. But the United States bore the brunt of the fighting and lost 33,629 men killed in battle.

General Mark Clark, a distinguished and brave American soldier who served in Korea as UN Commander, considered the contribution of the other UN members to the war as "piddling." At no time did the troops of other UN members in Korea amount to 10% of the American force of 450,000 men at peak strength.

Even this small contribution of the UN, as well as its original endorsement of U.S. action, were possible only because of the absence of the delegate of the Soviet Union from the Security Council. Thus he could not cast his veto. The fact, established as early as 1950, was that the UN Security Council was incapable of stopping communist or communist - favored aggression. Events in the following years told the same story over and over again.

The United States then turned to the General Assembly to circumvent the abuse of the veto power. Pursuant to a proposal power. Pursuant to a proposal by Secretary of State Dean Acheson, the General Assembly of the UN adopted the so-called "Uniting for Peace" resolution in 1950. This resolution simply provided that in cases where the Security Council fails "to act on an apparent threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression because of a negative vote (veto) by any one of its five permanent members, the Assembly itself may take up the matter immediately . . ." if necessary in an emergency session.

Not surprisingly, the resolution was opposed by the Soviet Union and her satellites. But the words of the resolution -- "because of a negative vote by any one of its five permanent members" -- must be kept in mind. Thus, while aimed at Soviet abuses of the veto, the resolution also applied to the four other permanent Security Council members -- Great Britain, France, Free China and the United States -- if they resorted to the veto power.

ANN LANDERS
Answers Your Questions

Dear Ann Landers: I never dreamed I'd write to a newspaper columnist for help, but I can't find the answers alone anymore.

My husband and I are both college graduates. We have three handsome sons. I am ashamed to tell you, but my husband started to collect pornography during adolescence and he can't break the habit.

I have found dozens of obscene pictures and "toys" stuffed between the rafters in the attic, in shoe boxes, in silverware drawers, under the carpets and even in the trunk of his car. Every time I find something new I get sick to my stomach. It is almost as if he plants this junk around where I'm sure to run into it.

Whenever I confront him with a new discovery, he tells the most bizarre lies - insists someone is trying to frame him - that he never saw the stuff before. Then he breaks down and cries and promises he'll never do it again.

Yesterday our 12-year-old son found some pictures and asked me whose they were. I said I didn't know. Please tell me what to do about this problem before I crack up - CAN'T SIGN MY NAME

Dear Can't: Your husband's hang-up dates back to childhood and you must treat it as an illness, which it is most assuredly.

Stop registering shock, disappointment and anger. Tell your husband, calmly, that he must select one hiding place for his collection, that it must be kept locked, that you will keep one key and he will keep the other. Explain that when you find bits and pieces of his collection around you'll put it where it belongs. Then do and say nothing.

Part of your husband's sick kick is witnessing you over-react when you discover the junk. When you reduce your hysteria he'll probably be less interested in his collection.

Dear Ann Landers: My father and mother are divorced. My father has a lady friend and he spends whatever spare time he has with her. He really doesn't have much spare time, though, because he works two jobs, which add up to 16 hours a day.

My mother works a double shift and puts in 15 hours a day. I am just getting into my teens and it seems I have lots of problems and nobody to talk to. I can't call my mother at work because it's against the rules. My father doesn't want to hear from me about my troubles because he has already told me he has plenty of his own.

I have gone to my teachers so many times already I am ashamed to bother them anymore. I need some grown-up help. The future frightens me - LONESOME GIRL

Dear Girl: Don't be ashamed to continue to go to your teachers for counsel. Teachers can be wonderfully helpful and, thank heavens, there are many who want to help. And don't forget me, Toots. I'll listen any time you want to unload. That's what I'm here for.

Confidential to What Shall I Say?: Say NO and make it clear that nothing is going to happen until he comes up with a license. What he'd like, of course, is a learner's permit which is a very old story, my dear. Don't buy it.

If you have trouble getting along with your parents . . . if you can't get them to let you live your own life, send for Ann Landers' booklet, "Bugged By Parents? How to Get More Freedom." Send 50¢ in coin with your request and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Missouri Press Report
Sen. Edward Long

The Senate Labor Committee has just approved a bill calling for 14 new mental health centers in Missouri.

The bill authorized approximately $10,751,000 for mental health centers in Missouri during the next three years.

Am pleased to report that to date, Missouri is one of the nation's leading states in the development of its mental health center program.

We already have centers in St. Louis, Columbia, Joplin, and Kansas City. Three more in Missouri are authorized for construction during the coming months.

By 1970, Missouri will have received $7,027,377 in Federal construction funds for a network of 20 key mental health centers to help serve all sections of Missouri. Missouri will have received an additional $10,240,000 to aid with staffing of the centers.

A bill to increase benefits for veterans serving since the Korean War has just been approved for action on the Senate floor.

This bill, which I co-sponsor, authorizes on-the-job and on-the-farm training programs for veterans and raises educational allowances to $130 per month for a single veteran in school, to $155 per month for a veteran with one dependent and to $175 per month for a veteran with two dependents.

Veterans serving after the Korean War would be eligible for education benefits for full-time apprenticeships under our bill.

A special section of the bill would allow a veteran to receive education assistance while completing high school needed for higher education.

Am hopeful that we can move this important bill through the Congress this session.

What should be done about the rapid increase in the rate of household injuries?

This is the question the proposed National Commission on Product Safety will try to answer if a bill I am supporting is passed by the Congress this year.

The Public Health Service estimates that faulty heating devices are now causing injuries at the rate of 125,000 a year, that stoves, power mowers, and washing machines each cause 100,000 injuries a year.

This year 40,000 citizens will be injuried from glass doors, and 60,000 from electrical extension cords and wall sockets.

The independent Consumers Union, after limited testing, has uncovered 376 products which are "hazardous" and "unacceptable in the home."

Firmly believe that creation of a commission to study this problem is one step in the right direction toward protecting the consumer.

THE GIFT

Cursed with care, heirs to tears,
Tempted and fallen, from Eden set apart,
Together they walked naked into the world.
And, the Father watched them with a saddened heart.
He saw the path before them reach
Down Time's dark lanes on earth's terrain.
What boon, what trait could He bestow,
Til they could be with Him, again?
He pondered with wisdom wide and deep;
And, then a smile around Him broke.
He spread aloft His loving arms;
And, then He spoke.
"From now, and through your life, hereafter,
I bless you, my children, with the gift of laughter."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE
BY Jack Strass L.L.D.

THE CASE OF THE DOGMA WITH A STIGMA

A state law was passed that authorized lost dogs to be used for scientific purposes. Naturally, this upset the vast populous of canine lovers who raced to court to attack the validity of the statute.

"A dog is an item of personal property," they argued vehemently. "You can't destroy a person's property just because it happens to get lost. It's not only unconstitutional as to the owner of the dog, it's unconsititutional to the dog also."

"Nonsense," answered the state's attorney. "The statute is absolutely legal. What's more, it's unquestionably better that a dog be used for science, for the betterment of humanity, than to permit it to roam the streets and become a menace. It's dogma that will just have to overcome the stigma."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you find that the statute violates the constitutional rights of dogs and/or their owners?

This is how the judge ruled: No! The judge held that, under the law, lost dogs properly treated as abandoned property, and, when abandoned, the owners no longer have any rights in the abandoned property.

As for the dogs, concluded the judge in effect, there is no such thing as a dog being deprived of its consititutional rights since, unlike people, they have none.

(Based upon a 1959 Mass. Supreme Judicial Court Decision.)

TODAY'S LEGAL POINTER

If you're dishonest, you will ultimately get caught. If you're not dishonest, basically you're going to lose a lot of sleep for having been dishonest. One way or the other, it pays to obey the law and to follow the straight and narrow.

MIDDLE EAST

It is clear that what we are accustomed to call the Free World, for some time threatened across the DMZ zone and the Ho Chi Minh Trails, now has further problems across the Straits of Tiran and the Gulf of Aqaba. The immediate cause is the blockade declared by President Nasser of Egypt.

Under the Tripartite Agreement of 1950 with Great Britain and France and the defininte commitments made by Secretary of State Dulles with respect to keeping open the Straits of Tiran and their availability to the shipping of all nations, the United States at minimum has a moral obligation in the Middle East.

In view of our already heavy commitments in other parts of the world, it could indeed be a serious matter if the U.S. became involved unilaterally. It is vitally important, therefore, that we only act jointly with the two other signatories of the 1950 Tripartite Agreement; and best of all that we act, if possible, under the United Nations.

PURINA KOREA COMPANY

A Missouri company, Ralston Purine of St. Louis, will be the first United States firm to undertake the development of feed production and poultry raising in Korea. That country is not now self-sufficient in food production.

The Agency for International Development will insure one-half of the U.S. firm's investment of $102,000 in Purina Korea Co., a joint venture by Ralston Purina and Korean shareholders. AID will also issue an extended risk guarantee to cover 75% of a $500,000 U.S. commercial bank loan.

The Purina Korea Co. will construct and operate a feed mill, butchery, broiler processing plant and breeder and grow-out farms. During the first three years of operation, the project is expected to generate sales of approximately $1.8 million of U.S. corn and milo.

CRIME PREVENTION AND CONTROL

A growing number of people believe that governmental efforts should be intensified and financial resources mobilized to prevent and reduce crime.

We are hopeful that more effective anti - crime legislation will be enacted in this session of Congress.

The Senate Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures will hold additional hearings next month on S.917, the Safe Streets and Crime Control Act of 1967, and other Administration anti-crime measures relating to correctional services and the establishment of a Federal Judicial Center.

Included in S.917 is an authorization of $50 million in 1968 and $300 million in 1969 to help states and communities to develop plans for improved law enforcement.

MISSOURI MILITARY ACADEMY

On May 28 I was honored to speak at the commencement exercises of the Missouri Military Academy in Mexico, Missouri.

The day also marked 50 years of service to American youth by Col. C. R. Stribling, who has headed the Academy for 34 years.

This outstanding military academy was founded 78 years ago and presently has an enrollment of 325 cadets in grades 6 through 12.

For 37 years, Missouri Military Academy has been rated an Honor Military School by the Department of the Army.

One of the gifts we received upon the birth of our baby was a kit of disposable nursing bottles. Since I was breast-feeding my baby, I decided to return the gift to the store. I told the saleswoman my reason for not wanting the kit, and I was amused to read on the required form her one-word explanation: "Duplicate."

Polly's Pointers®
Suggests 'Hope Chest' For Household Items

By POLLY CRAMER
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

DEAR POLLY—My Pointer is for brides-to-be. A few months before my wedding I bought a large garbage can. Each week I bought a few inexpensive but necessary household items to go in it. By the time the big day rolled around the can was full and quite a help when that first shopping trip was made. Also after stocking the kitchen shelves from it I had a much-needed trash can.—A. S.

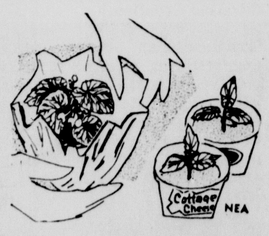
DEAR POLLY—My suggestion for Mrs. R. C. who wants to clean the rush seats to her chairs is that she first clean them with the brush on her vacuum. Apply a fresh coat of clear lacquer and they will look like new.—MRS. M. L. D.

DEAR GIRLS—I have washed such seats and they "tightened" during the drying period. This would be done before varnishing or lacquering.—POLLY

Polly's Problem

DEAR POLLY—My uncle's doctor has ordered him to use a bed that is raised at the head like a hospital bed. He slips down during the night and has fallen out of bed a few times. I do hope some of the readers have a solution for this.—MISS A.V.

DEAR POLLY—I am a mother of four children and have a very limited income but love to give gifts to my friends. I have found an easy way to continue my gift-giving at a small expense. An everblooming begonia plant I have had for years does the work for me. I start slips from this hardy plant in cottage cheese and other similar containers. Usually there is one in bloom when I need it, so then I buy pretty containers and transplant the blooming begonia for a nice gift. At times I have just wrapped the makeshift container with foil, put ribbon around it and tied a pretty bow. These plants are nice for the children's teachers. Scout leaders, a new neighbor or moving-away neighbor's gifts. It is a joy to think how far my plants have traveled and how many of my friends have started the same idea.—MRS. H. Y.



DEAR POLLY—Those with lace robes where the lace top and the lining are not fastened together will find that basting the lace to the lining with long stitches down each side will prevent the lace from doubling up and turning back. —DEBORAH.

Dear "Charlie",

I was so surprised to see the picture of our Basketball team!

I received a copy of the Standard -- from Mrs. Lee Bowman today.

It certainly will bring back many pleasant memories!

It is hard to believe that was taken 39 years ago!

"TIME" is fleeting -- isn't it?

You won't remember -- but, I was the only girl to play "on the team" 4 years.

I was "Sweet 16" when this picture was taken -- and, was a Sophomore. (I hope I was sweet, and considerate of others.)

I was so fond of Lottie Dover. She was a wonderful Coach, Physical Education teacher, lovely, darling, sweet, etc.!

We were all so fortunate to have had her for our teacher! And, M. C. Cunningham for our Principal!

After they left Sikeston -- they lived up here in Jefferson City for a year or so, I believe.

Joe and I were married then, and they were over to see us -- and, we were in their home.

I haven't seen them since they moved to Kansas.

I would certainly like to see them.

I had hoped we would be driving through their city someday -- and, we would get to see them then.

TO YOU -- "Thanks For The Memories"!

Sincerely,
Imogene Mayer

In his introduction to Richard Lamparski's "Whatever Became Of?" (Crown, $4.95), Cleveland Amory Quoted the English critic John Collins:

"The world, like an accomplished hostess, pays most attention to those whom it will soon forget."

Mr. Amory translated Collins' quip into modern show business language, with this drama:

"Who is Hugh O'Brian?"
"Get me Hugh O'Brian."
"Get me a Hugh O'Brian type."
"Get me a young Hugh O'Brian."
"Who was Hugh O'Brian?"

He goes on to tell how a columnist during World War II took a poll to find the world's favorite personality. The Pope finished behind Bing Crosby and Frank Sinatra; others in order were Eisenhower, Father Flanagan, MacArthur, Walter Wenchell, Sister Kenney, and Bob Hope. Joseph Stalin finished 15th.

For the nostalgic minded, eager to relish again headlines names of yesteryear, here are vignettes and pictures of Father Coughlin, Sally Rand, Max Schmeling, Miss America of 1919, Charles A. Lindbergh, Alfred M. Landon, (the Sunflower Hopeful), Bobby Jones, Alexander Kerensky, and Martin Dies.

Others whose names and pictures once graced the news pages and news reels, resurrected here, are Helen Gahagen Douglas, Pola Negri, Red Grange, Libby Holman, Gerald L. K. Smith.

Amos 'n' Andy, Elaine Barrie Barrymore, John T. Scopes of Monkey Trial fame; Hamilton Fish, Charles Atlas, John J. Anthony, Gabriel Heatter, Jesse Owens, Eddie Arcaro, Gertrude Ederle, and Donald Budge.

This goes back to recall Blanche Sweet, Chester Conklin, Douglas "Wrong Way" Corrigan, Hubert F. Julian, the "Black Eagle, Magda Lupescu, and Georges Carpentier. Also representing the ring of old is James J. Braddock; Johnny, 'Tarzan' Weissmuller shouts in the jungle again; remember Sonja Henie, 'Jersey Joe' Walcott, Primo Carnera; in the political arena we remember Gerald P. Nye; once-upon-a-time in tennis recalls Helen Wills Moody; here are echoes of Fred Spitalny's music, and the shrill notes of Bobby Breen.

Save a page for Burton K. Wheeler. Fred A. Hartley (of Taft-Hartley Bill fame); Luise Rainer, Norma Shearer, Paulette Goddard, Ramon Navarro, Ilona Massey, Constance Talmadge, the Boswell Sisters, Irene Rich, Beb Daniels, Stepin Fetchit, and Carl Hubbell, once names to conjure with.

Mr. Lamparski has produced a gripping morsel of nostalgia, with 'then- and - now' pictures of onetime celebrities.

Gracious, are we THAT old?

Today In U. S. History

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Today is Wednesday, May 31, the 151st day of 1967. There are 214 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On this date in 1793, the reign of terror began in the French revolution.

On this date:

In 1819, American poet Walt Whitman was born.

In 1889, the Johnstown, Pa., flood took more than 2,000 lives.

In 1910, the Union of South Africa was founded.

The telegram points out that the Kansas City office will not approve Head Start funds unless Phillips is reinstated as director of the program.

Edwards also requested that Shriver provide information about who has the power to hire DAEOC officials. At the hearing for Phillips and Graves, Clyde S. Cahill Jr., legal counsel for the regional office, told the board that it had the power to hire and fire its own employes.

The telegram concludes: "We (the DAEOC board) call for a complete and fair investigation of the operations of the OEO programs in Southeast Missouri and the autocratic actions of the Kansas City office."

DAEOC is the war on poverty unit serving Scott, Mississippi, Stoddard, New Madrid, Dunklin and Pemiscot counties.

steps leading to the inner chamber of the temple, reached into the cart, and gathered in his arms the little child and took it into the temple with him.

"After offering prayer he picked up the child again, carried it down the steps and placed it back in the cart.

One of the American men asked, "Did the war do this to the little child?" The answer was yes. The American then asked, "You went into the temple to pray?"

The native replied, "Oh, yes, You see we prayed to let God know that He is our God, and we will never forget."

At that he pointed to the flag the Seabees had in the jeep and said, "My sons, your flag, always remember what it means to you. It was born because of God's guidance in forming your nation."

The flag stands as a symbol of the country for which it stands, he continued.

"A country of pioneers, of conquest, of land and community development. A country which brought forth settlers who believed that the forces of hatred and idealogies of conquest could and must be defeated. A country that moves progressively forward. A country that has reached out its arms to encompass all mankind and to bring to its shores the tired, the poor, and the wanderer -- that they might find a homeland," he continued.

The flag is a symbol of religious privileges, of spiritual blessing and of the age in which we live, he said.

"Oh this day, we remember all our loved ones who have joined the church triumphant and it is with love and sadness that this is a special day of rememberance. As we appropriate the courage and heroism of the past, we make the past a part of our lives.

He then read William Rose Benet's poem "Good Luck Soldier."

The ceremony closed with the playing of taps.

Wiretapping Bill Passes

JEFFERSON CITY (AP) -- A bill to ban wiretapping, bugging or other electronic snooping was passed by the Missouri Senate today. The vote sending it to the House was 23-7.

Law enforcement officers could use electronic eavesdropping devices in cases involving treason, kidnaping or overthrow of the government. Even then they would have to get a court order to do it.

Altogether the Senate sent 13 bills to the House in a busy morning. Among them were two that would allow the state to participate in federal programs.

One would let the state set up parks, marinas or other recreational facilities at federal reservoirs. The federal government would advance the money and the projects would be paid for by user fees over a 50-year period.

The other would permit the state to transmit grants to sewer districts or other local units for water pollution control projects. Its cost is estimated at $5 million.

The federal government would pay 50 per cent of the cost, the state 25 per cent and the local unit 25 per cent.

Also passed, 30-2, was a bill to increase the uniformed strength of the Highway Patrol from 650 to 750 men at an annual cost of $1,121,000. The rank of corporal would be added.

Other bills passed included ones to:

Require junk dealers to report any purchases of copper wire or copper products to the sheriff—an effort to curb the growing number of copper thefts.

Require insurance companies to offer coverage to their policyholders to protect them against uninsured motorists.

Give Kansas City 50 per cent of the county road and bridge tax collected in the city.

Raise the pay of the director of the Mental Diseases Division from $25,000 to $35,000 a year. Some of his psychiatrists already get $33,000.

Set up a governor's mansion advisory commission composed of the widows of former governors and pay them $3,000 a year for their services.

The House passed 140-5 a bill establishing an interstate compact on taxtion, to allocate to the states the tax obligation of firms operating in interstate commerce.

Sponsors said it was needed to keep the federal government from taking over the field.

Adoption of a minor House amendment sends the bill back to the Senate.

Twice the House ran into trouble on the Senate version of the LSD bill.

An amendment was offered that would change the penalty for possession, sale or transfer of hallucinogenic drugs—except by doctors — from a misdemeanor to a felony.

An objection was al raised about permitting nurses to dispense these drugs so it was laid over while the House sponsor, Rep. Carl Niewoehner, D-Columbia, prepared amendments to change the bill.

The House passed a Senate bill without change to permit extension of commercial zoning for use by heavy trucks, from one mile to a possible 15-mile limit. It would let heavy construction trucks use state roads around cities where building is booming. The bill goes to the governor.

Tuesday the Senate passed and sent to the governor a bill to cut the unemployment taxes of Missouri employers.

Cigarettes, Money Taken

Cigarettes and coins of an undetermined amount were reported stolen from a vending machine in Harris Grocery Store, 227 Petty, police reported today.

The breakin was discovered by Mrs. Carrie Harris, wife of the store owner, at about 9 a.m. today, police said.

Entry was gained by twisting off the latch on the front door, police said.

In other activity, two Negro juveniles were arrested by police at 9:45 a.m. today. The youths admitted taking three packages of cigarettes from a parked car and a package of hamburger buns from a Hart's Bakery truck, police said.

Another juvenile was arrested Tuesday at Edward's IGA Supermarket, 863 West Malone, attempting to steal a carton of cigarettes, police reported. He was transferred to the authority of the juvenile officer.

The rear door of a building formerly used to store furniture in the 100 block of west Center Street was broken into Tuesday, police reported. The building houses an office used by W. R. Lair, 322 N. New Madrid. He was called by police to check the building, and nothing was noticed missing, police said.

Herbert C. Reno, North Street, was charged by police Monday with public intoxication. He was arrested at 518 South Kingshighway.

James J. Tidwell, route two, Sikeston, was charged by police with public intoxication Tuesday on East Malone, police reported.

A small vending machine believed to have been used for candy or bubble gum was found Tuesday evening on the railroad tracks on Sunset Drive. It was taken to the police station.

said the bulk of the Soviet naval force is expected to sail through the strait June 3. They are destroyers No. 626, 383 and 514.

The command said another destroyer, No. 355, and the icebreaker Verdusanov are expected to pass through the Bosporus. They will be accompanied by a torpedo boat.

According to a sailing schedule of Soviet warships through the strait handed to the Turkish government and disclosed by the strait command, an oceangoing tug will follow them June 7.

Vice Adm. William I. Martin, commander of the 6th Fleet, said Tuesday the United States intends to keep the international sea lanes open.

"We will do whatever we are directed to do by the President and that includes a whole range of options," said Rear Adm. Lawrence R. Geis, commander of the 6th Fleet's Task Force 60.

A buildup of Western naval power also appeared under way in the Red Sea as Britain's Cabinet pondered ways for joint action with the United States and other maritime powers to beat Egypt's blockade of the Gulf of Aqaba, Israel's access to the Red Sea.

The British were reported considering formation of a naval task force to escort ships through the Strait of Tiran into the gulf where Israel's chief oil importing port of Elath is located.

A British Foreign Office spokesman in London stressed, however, that Britian and other western powers are still concentrating on a search for a diplomatic settlement.

Informants said a naval escort would not necessarily mean the use of force but might make Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser think twice about trying to turn back shipping to Elath.

The British aircraft carrier-Hermes, two frigates and five minesweepers of the Royal Navy were reported in the vicinity of Aden, at the southern entrance to the Red Sea. British newspapers have reported that two U.S. destroyers also are in the Red Sea area, in addition to powerful units of the 6th Fleet and the Royal Navy that are expected to rendezvous soon in the eastern Mediterranean.

Adm. Martin refused to say whether the U. S. carrier Intrepid - now in the Mediterranean but not under his command- might be ordered to go through the Suez Canal. The Intrepid, with 70 attack planes, was originally bound for Vietnam but has been held in the Mediterranean.

It is the only carrier in the area small enough to pass through the canal and could be used to bolster Western naval strength in the Red Sea and in the area of the Gulf of Aqaba.

Nasser tightened the squeeze on Israel another notch Tuesday, signing a mutual defense pact in Cairo with his old enemy King Hussein of Jordan.

Nasser posed smilingly with the Jordanian monarch whom he had denounced less than a month ago as an agent of American intelligence. The two leaders called each other "brothers' and pledged to combine their military forces against Israel in a five-year renewable pact.

"The world will be astonished today when it hears of this agreement," Nasser said after the signing.

"This proof that Arabs forget their differences at serious times," said Nasser. "Israel, the United States and Britain must realize that we are determined to preserve our rights in Palestine."

City Flushing Water Hydrants

Board of Public Works workers today began flushing out rusty water in the city water lines by opening fire hydrants on the east side of Highway 61, E. R. Inman, manager, said today.

Flushing will continue until the lines are clear. The flushing is done about twice a year, he said.

All hydrants east of the highway will be flushed first.

Hydrants west of the highway will be opened later he said.

The flushing may cause residents in the area where the lines are being flushed to have more rust appear until the line is clear, he said. He advised against washing today.

Dog Fractures Beaird's Knee

James (Jim) Beaird, 1914 Kentucky Road, is nursing a fractured knee as the result of being knocked to the ground by his coon dog.

Beaird said, "The dog zigged when he should have zagged," as he was getting his dog out to exercise. The animal made a sudden lunge, causing his knee cap to be knocked down, resulting in the fracture.

He has been getting around on crutches since the accident May 19, and will remain on them for another five weeks.

BARN IN SUBURBIA

Defiantly the lone barn, sagging, squats
Tip - tilted on its ancient, moldering base.
Around it pastel homes on ordered plots
Enroached upon its heritage of space.

A graceless form, its purpose long fulfilled,
Grotesquely hunched with years and weather - browned
The barn, a time - scored sentry, iron - willed,
Broods upon the past -- and stands its ground.

Foyt Wins Indy. 500

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (AP) — A heart-breaking power failure just 7½ miles from the finish by Parnelli Jones' revolutionary turbine racer swept Texan A.J. Foyt to his third 500-mile auto race victory in a wreck-jammed delayed running of the 51st motor classic today.

In an incredible windup to a bizarre race, which was postponed by rain after 45 miles Tuesday, Foyt—who had ostensibly settled for second place behind the record-smashing Jones—suddenly was handed victory when the sleek red turbine quit and limped into the pits.

Foyt, who previously won the 1964 and 1961 races, snaked through a spectacular five-car home stretch crackup on the last lap.

Foyt, who nudged ahead of Jones only twice during pit stops by the turbine, was clocked in a record average time of 151.207 miles per hour.

Foyt, who joined a select group of three-time Indy winners including Mauri Rose, Louis Meyer and Wilbur Shaw, broke the former record of 150.686 set by Scotland's Jim Clark in 1965.

Had Jones, whose wonder car suddenly was stricken by a broken gear box, been able to finish, the record would have been smashed by about an average of two or three miles per hour faster.

Five Hurt in Two-Car Crash

Five persons were slightly injured in a two-car collision at 10:15 a.m. on Memorial Day, two miles north of Cape Girardeau on highway 61.

A 1966 Ford, driven by Harvey Clark, 37, Bridgeton passed another vehicle on the yellow line, and struck a 1965 Cadillac, driven by James Johannes, 25, Jackson, headon, the patrol charged.

Injured in the Clark car were Julia Clark, 22, bruises on the body; Carlis clark, 11, arm and head bruises, and the driver, cuts and bruises on the head. All are from Bridgeton.

Injured in the Johannes car were the driver, bruises on his lip, and a passenger, John Stobbe, 22, Blytheville, Ark., with bruises on the nose and knee.

All of the injured were taken to the Southeast Missouri hospital in Cape Girardeau.

Clark was arrested for improper passing.

Tuesday at 1:10 a.m., on highway 61, six miles north of Portageville, Emanuel Geiser, 32, Cape Girardeau, driver of a 1965 Chevrolet, received a neck injury when his car struck a trailer.

He was passing another car when a hitch on a 1966 Chevrolet truck, driven by Eniz Monez, 38, Houston, Tex., broke, causing the Geiser car to strike it.

James Menz, 56, Illmo, was arrested for careless and imprudent driving in an accident Monday on Interstate 55, a half mile north of Scott City.

He was driving a 1963 Corvair, when he ran off the road and struck a guard rail.

Menz received cuts on his head and arms and was taken to the St. Francis hospital in Cape Girardeau.

Orbits of Thought

FIVE weeks spent in the hospital have slipped away with amazing swiftness and already the routine, so welcome at first, is boresome.

Now the newspaper is important again. The world is pushing in, and the hospital is where on used to be, although it is still one's address for a few more days.

Because this has been a new experience, there have been new thoughts about life and death, and the way people face both. The usual direction of thought has been radically diverted.

I have thought sometimes of our Lord walking through a modern hospital with wonder and joy. Always acutely sensitive to the needs of others, He would be, I think, especially vulnerable to the mute claims of the sick.

In His day the incurable lay in public places, begging their subsistence, a constant reminder not only of man's inhumanity to man, but of man's impotence then to deal with sickness.

Imagine His delight, for example, to walk through the rehabilitation department of the hospital and observe what is being done for men by other men. Here are the people who, in His day, waited at the pool for the "troubling of the waters" -- their one slim chance for healing.

Little children are here, young men and women, on up to an 85-year-old man in a cast from his neck to hips, yet with enormous courage, inch by painful inch, learning to walk again.

Once these would have been the rejects of life, doomed to days of wretched neglect, futile living and a miserable death. Now, thanks to the concern of men for other men, they are going on to independent living, to work, to useful membership in society.

When those around Him spoke wonderingly of His miracles, our Lord said a strange thing: "You shall do greater things than these . . ." These, surely, are the greater things of which He spokes -- the wonder of man seeking out human needs and learning how to meet those needs through lives of unbelievable sacrifice and dedication.

I have also been deeply moved by the gallant ways in which people came to terms, both with continued living, and with dying.

For many, perhaps for most, these are lonely and certainly unfamiliar roads. One of my new friends is going home to a life of semi-invalidism.

Lively, gay, married to a man who thrives on good times, entertainment, shows, and life in a general, she faced the future with dread.

One day we talked about it. "What I must do now," she said, "is to develop inner resources so that whatever happens I shall be not too startled or shocked. This is my challenge, and I feel that in Christ I shall have strength to take it up."

My roommate's problem was different. She was going home to die, and knew it. She was a beautiful woman, both to look at, and in spirit.

Late one night, lying in the darkness, we spoke of death. As we talked we began to think that perhaps death was merely an extension of life on another plane. That just as one was conscious of that which is above and beyond, so death might be the door through which we stepped in to transcendent life.

"You know," said my friend, " my mother used to say 'When God closes one door He opens another.' I am going to believe that death is another part of the House of Life -- the most beautiful and the best, and that when the door closes, the door to Life will be already opening."

The experiences of these five weeks will soon be like a dream, but never, never shall we forget that here we came face to face with realities of life -- life and death, the lonely battlefield of the human spirit where unsuspected depths of insight, courage and faith are given to those whose need is great.

Arab Nations Get More U.S. Aid Than Israel

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has sent more than $2 billion in aid since World War II to five Arab nations involved in the current Middle East crisis with neighboring Israel.

That's nearly twice the dollar value of all forms of U.S. government aid to Israel.

But unlike the Arab nations, Israel has in the United States private sources of aid and financing that have provided the Jewish homeland funds at least equaling the total of U.S. government help to Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Yemen and the United Arab Republic.

Military aid of $227.8 million included in the total for Israel's Arabic neighbors has gone almost entirely to Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

Most of Jordan's $66 million has been outright grants of money and excess American military equipment. But government records show substantial portions of the $517.2 million in economic aid for Jordan has gone into construction of roads and facilities planned to bolster the kingdom's defense position.

A decade ago the United States took over from Britain most of the burden of supporting Jordan. American support has continued, a handbook of the Agency for International Development states, because of "the danger that Jordan's dismemberment might produce violence throughout the area."

Military aid for Jordan compares with $27.6 million for Israel, all in credit assistance to help Israel buy arms.

Saudi Arabia has received $161.7 million in military assistance against $47.4 of economic aid. But 60 per cent of the total has been in the form of loans or credits.

Only $100,000 of the $73.3 million aid total for Syria has been for military purposes and more than one-half has been in loans.

All of the $41.8 million for Yemen has been outright gifts, with less than $50,000 alloted for military aid. U.S. aid to Yemen ended this spring, after the state arrested two American officials, who later were released on bail and then left the country.

Egypt has some of her best troops in Yemen, which has received an estimated $140 million in economic and defense support assistance from Red China and the Soviet Union since 1957.

The United States has aided Egypt to the tune of $1.13 billion — or more than half the total assistance to the Arab states of the Middle East.

All of this aid has been economic, and most has gone to Egypt through the Food for Peace program. Sale in Egypt of this food, mostly grains, has in turn generated local currency loans to the government of President Gamal Abdel Nasser and lesser amounts to Egyptian private industry.

As in many countries, these loans are repaid or credited to the account of the United States in local currencies and do not come back to Washington in the form of dollars.

Food shipments to Egypt ceased last June, but technical assistance valued at about $1.4 million continues. Also still under way is a $9.5-million program of feeding people, conducted through voluntary agencies working with the U.S. government.

UNITED ARAB REPUBLIC PRESIDENT GAMAL ABDEL NASSER'S eldest son, Abdel Hamid (left), 16, takes rifle practice with the Futewa Youth Organization in Heliopolis, Cairo. President Nasser said in a speech that "our main objective will be the destruction of Israel."

PAUL FLOWERS'
Greenhouse

C. C. Coker of Rienzi, Miss., on behalf of citizens of Old Jacinto, rises to protest Greenhouse's spelling of the popular pronunciation of the town's name. Mr. Coker reports that it is more likely to be pronounced "Jay-CIN-ta," and I accept the amendment, reluctant as I am to trust my ears.

Actually, French and Spanish proper names come out with some odd twists . . . Bellefontaine becomes Bell-Fountain; D'lo emerges as "Dee-Low" in two syllables, and Monticello, from the Italian, is never pronounced with the "c" sounded as "ch."

Proper Spanish pronunciation of Jacinto, as "Hah-THEEN-tow," would sound odd in our part of the world; indeed, among Spanish - speaking people south of us, it appears as "Ha-sin-toe"; Saltillo, both in Tennessee and Mississippi, has been Americanized; Buena Vista becomes simply "Buna Vista."

LaFayette is rendered in Tennessee and Mississippi as La-FAY-ette, with heavy accent on the second syllable; but in Louisiana, where a stronger French-speaking tradition persists the accent falls on the final syllable.

Nor are these standards confined to any region. In Ohio, Toeldo is rendered "T'leda"; Cincinnati and Miami become "Cincinnata" and "Miama"; a street in Lower Manhattan is "Howston" there, a pronunciation hich irritates residents along Texas' Buffalo Bayou.

When Al Smith and his backers went to Houston for the Democratic National Convention in 1928, Al and many of the others outraged Texans by calling the host city "How-ston," and compounded the felony by alluding to wireless as "Raddi-o," to rhyme with "Daddy-o."

Many Mississippians pronounce Dr. Toxey Hall's Delta town as "Belzona"; and if you follow the river which flows past Little Rock up to Garden City, Kan., it becomes "Ar-KAN-sas." That irks Arkansawers.

At the juncture of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, there is the city of Cairo, pronounced in this country like a brand of corn syrup; the city in Egypt for which it was named is "Ky-ro."

Yankees do some quaint things with pronunciations of Louisiana and New Orleans; homefolks are prone to make them into "Lo-zana," and "Noo-Wallance."

Terre Haute in Indiana gets some special treatment at home and abroad; pronunciation of Los Angeles can stir a debate (backed by horse pistols;) and patriots around the Golden Gate will thank you not to call their city "Frisco."

Minnesota has its Montevideo, pronounced very unlike the Spanish city in Uruguay; and Missouri's Potosi comes out, in the Show - Me State, as "Po - TOE-si."

Radio and television pundits have a hard time with Mississippi's Tupelo; they can't resist the temptation to shift an accent and make it. "Tu-PEL-o." Towns and counties bearing the name of the Venezuelan diplomat and hero, shift the accent to the first syllable; Simon called himself "SEE-mon Bol-ee-var."

Who's to say how people of a region should pronounce their place names and their own surnames? Mark Twain had considerable fun with a nouveau-riche Dunlap family of Scottish origin, when they Frenchified it into d'Un Lappe. It made them happy.

With all of which, here's an apology to Mr. Coker and all the good folks of Old Jacinto, and a hearty endorsement of whatever way they want to pronounce it. Commercial Appeal

So That's A Shamrock

John J. Pinney in
The Kansas City Star

Probably no country has an emblem more closely identified with it than the shamrock is with Ireland.

It was St. Patrick himself who was responsible for this. Tradition has it that he used the trifoliate shamrock to illustrate the nature of the Trinity.

The traditional Irish ballad "The Wearin' O' the Green" not only expresses the indomitable spirit of freedom of the Irish but identified the shamrock with "the Green" and provides evidence that it is some sort of plant.

What is this shamrock that will take root if it is thrown upon the ground and which means so much to the Irish? According to Bailey's Cyclopedia of Horticulture, "half the world is sure that shamrock is wood sorrel (oaxlis acetosella) while the other half is equally certain that the true shamrock is white clover (Trifolium repens)."

When we were in Ireland we decided to do a little shamrock research on our own. On the road from Limerick to Dublin we came upon a charming little white washed stone cottage. The roof was thatched. Along the front of the cottage and separated from the road by a low stone wall was a lovely flower garden.

This seemed a likely place to look for the shamrock. We were graciously received by the cottager's wife and shown through the little dwelling, which was as charming inside as out.

After explaining that our ancestors, only one generation back, were from Ireland and we had been visiting the home near Bantry Bay, we inquired if there were any shamrocks in that lovely garden.

"Indeed there are. Let me show them to you."

And we were led into the little fairy-land garden. In a corner under a rose bush were several small clumps of foliage that looked like clover to us. The three-part leaves were not much larger than a mouse's ear.

While we were photographing the shamrock we noticed a clump of wood soorel nearby.

"Isn't this also called shamrock?" we inquired.

"Yes, it is called that by some, but it is not the true shamrock."

When we remarked that her supply of shamrock seemed to be rather small she explained that British tourists would beg for plants to take home to England.

"I don't know whatever for," she said, "because you know the shamrock will not grow in England."

The shamrock can be grown from seed so while in Dublin we called on a seedsman at the 19 Cork Hill street. He had the seed in neat little packets, with cultural instructions printed on them:

"Sow thinly in open garden or flower box in late summer or early autumn. Add a little lime to the soil."

As simple as that! When we inquired of the seedsman the botanical name of the shamrock, he looked at us pityingly as if to imply that every Irishman should know that and replied, "Trifolium repens, of course."

The festival of Whitsun, or Pentecost, falls on the seventh Sunday after Easter. The English celebrate Whitmonday with games, sports, dancing, ale quaffing and general springtime revelry.

Saving A Man's Soul is Not Enough

By Richard O. Bennett, Secretary - Treasurer Insurance Institute for Highway Safety.

Around our house the so-called breadwinner (me) will on occasion dare to penetrate the realm of household management by making a cautious suggestion, such as "How come jelly on the TV screen?" Invariably the vice-president in charge of major decisions (the wife) will offer a bit of mailed-fist advice, such as "You mind the office and I'll mind the house," or words to that effect.

This bit of domestic repartee has really nothing to do with the topic to be garnished with random thoughts in this article. It was included only to illustrate a situation that is rampant in traffic safety circles today.

It seems that people in the various traffic accident prevention persuasions are jealous of their prerogatives. When a plain everyday citizen dares to comment to a traffic engineer that a certain traffic signal causes more accidents than it prevents, he usually is squelched with a remark such as "It's getting so every Tom, Dick, and Harry thinks he's a traffic engineer."

Many traffic policeman are convinced that they and they alone are endowed, through their power of arrest, with the magic touch needed to curtail traffic accidents.

Even some highway builders are enamored with the idea that all efforts by other disciplines to prevent motor vehicle collisions are just so much fluff, and that only by building multi-laned divided highways (sans intersections, pedestrians, and roadside obstructions) can the frequency of accieent be materially reduced.

The traffic judge, the researcher, the psychiatrist, the educator, and even the city planner seem to be of the opinion that the solution to the traffic problem lies within his capabilities, and nowhere else.

But, also, the one persuasion that, according to logic, could have the greatest influence on this important humanitarian movement is content to sit back and let George do it. I have reference to the clergy, of course. History of mankind is replete with examples of the influence for good that religious leaders have had in times of crisis -- disaster, war, plague, famine, and revolution.

Blast Kills Butler Man

BUTLER, Mo. (AP) — A Butler man was killed early Saturday in a mysterious dynamite explosion in a car in which he and a companion were riding.

Eddie Galloway, 20, a service station attendant, died in a hospital shortly after the blast. The car was leaving a filling station to enter U.S. 71 as the blast occurred.

The driver, Ellis L. McElwain, 17, also of Butler, sufered severe burns.

Herb Adams, chief of police, said it apeared that Galloway was holding the two sticks of dynamite in his lap when they exploded.

How they were set off is not known. Officers said there was a possibility they may have been detonated by static electricity from a two-way radio on a train that was switching cars a block away.

Adams said two more sticks of dynamite and more than 25 blasting caps were found in the back seat of the car. He said eight more sticks of the explosive were found later in Galloway's car, parked in a car wash about five blocks from the blast scene.

Bill Coke, attendant at the service station neac the blast site, said the two drove into the station about 2:30 a.m. and asked for some adhesive tape. He wad none but gave the two some string. He said the two drove off and as the car was making a left turn onto the highway the blast ripped the vehicle. The explosion blew out the windows, damaged the dashboard, blew away the interior roof upholstery and blew a hole in the seat.

Officers said they would question McElwain about the dynamite and what the two had planned to do with it.

Hoover Letter Text Released

WASHINGTON -- U.S. Sen. Edward V. Long (D-Missouri) today released the text of a letter from FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover which, Long said, "answers better than I can whether my fight against invasion of privacy is blunting the organized crime drive."

In the letter Hoover says, "I am certainly in accord with the objectives of your Committee to establish safeguards and proper controls which will preclude the uncontrolled and indiscriminate use of "wiretapping and eavesdropping.

Senator Long said, "There is no one in the country who can better inform us as to the fight against crime than Director Hoover."

The Senator added he had had complete cooperation from both the Justice Department and the FBI. Both of them had supplied all information sought by the subcommittee.

He said that much of this information had not been placed in the public record because of security considerations.

The text:

"I would like to express, on behalf of my associates and myself, our appreciation for the close examination which you and your staff made of our procedures concerning the use of electronic listening devices in connection with our investigative operations.

"Your inquiries in this regard were certainly marked by complete objectivity and fairness in developing a full and complete picture of our use of these techniques.

"As you well know from these exhaustive studies, as well as conferences with our representatives, both at Federal Bureau of Investigation headquarters and in Senate offices, the Federal Bureau of Investigation's policies and procedures throughout the years have been such as to completely preclude any uncontrolled or unwarranted use of such devices.

"As you have determined in your penetrative inquiry, we have restricted and limited the use of these techniques to only the most serious situations involving the national security and the investigations of heinous crimes wherein human life and the welfare of our citizens are at stake, and in conspiracies and the atrocious crimes of violence perpetrated or plotted by key hoodlum leaders of the organized underworld. With respect to wire tapping, this technique has only been utilized in situations involving the national security and in kidnapping and extortion investigations. These policies and procedures have, of course, been approved by various Attorneys General down through the years.

"All of us consider it a welcome opportunity to have had the privilege of working with you and your staff. I am certainly in accord with the objectives of your Committee to establish safeguards and proper controls which will preclude the uncontrolled and indiscriminate use of these investigative techniques.

"We consider the searching inquiries made by you completely justified and, therefore, we were happy to submit our procedures for your close scrutiny. It has been a pleasure to have been of service to you in this connection."

Lack of Response To Pollution Cleanup

JEFFERSON CITY (AP)— A lack of replies to a questionnaire sent to firms in the Kansas City area may lead to more stringent action by the Missouri Air Conservation Commission.

E.F. Porter Jr., executive secretary of the state's air pollution control agency, said about 700 of the detailed questionnaires were mailed April 24 but the response has een only about 20 per cent.

The agency is working with the U.S. Public Health Service and local agencies to conduct an inventory of sorces in the metropolitan area as part of a comprehensive air pollution survey.

Porter said an attempt is being made now by telephone to gain the voluntary cooperation of firms which have not yet responded.

He said if theis proves unsuccessful, the commission will consider further action at its next meeting tentatively set for June 28 in Kansas City.

Grabers Prepare For Action Sale

MEMPHIS - "We're taking action. Action to lower the cost of living."

This is the way Sam Graber, president of Grabers, described his firm's 48th Anniversary Action Sale that starts Wednesday.

"That's why we decided to cal it the Action Sale," he said. "We know that our customers want somebody to do something about prices. But, we also know that nobody wants lower quality with lower prices. We have combined quality with lower prices to make this the biggest sale in our 48-year history," Graber continued.

"Events such as this have been nstrumental in our growing from one small store in Cardwell, Missouri, to one of the largest groups of stores based in the mid-south," stated Graber.

There are 27 Graber stores in Missouri, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas. With headquarters in Memphis, the firm has continued to be owned and operated by the Graber family. Today, the third generation of the family is actively engaged in the operation of the company.

Milton Bernstein is manager of the Sikeston, Mo., Graber store.

A feature event of the Action Sale is the free Ford Mustang that will be given away. "Just register in the store. Nothing to buy, no letters to write or anything else. It's that simple," stated Bernstein.

Skeleton of Indian Unearthed

NEOSHO, Mo. (AP) — The skeleton of an Indian has been unearthed by Jack Ingram on a hill behind his home at Ritchey, Mo.

The body had been buried with the knees drawn up a common practice among early cultures. Near the skull were 17 small, perfect arrow points and a small collection of snail shells. The skull had been crushed, but the upper and lower jaws and the teeth in them were intact.

Not all of the skeleton has been uncovered. The Missouri Archeological Society is to send an expert to complete the job.

Ingram said he discovered the remains about 20 inches below the surface.

At an exclusive resort, a porter brought down the luggage for a nicely dressed old gentleman and stowed it into his Cadillac. The old gentleman, about to give the porter a tip, asked him if he could change a dollar. "Around here," said the porter, "A dollar is change." Mrs. H. Priday.

Are You Running With Me?

THE OTHER DAY we found ourselves in a part of the city we had not visited for some time. Coming up out of the subway, we thought that surely we had made a mistake. Where the old White Tower coffee stand had been, there was a huge, block-long office building. The antique furniture shop which had stood on the opposite corner for 75 years or more was gone, and in its place soared a vast luxury apartment building. Gone were the little clustering shops -the grocer's, the cobbler's, the candy store -- and the long, long rows of last century tenements -- all gone, and their inhabitants as well.

How swiftly change comes now. Fifty years ago the cycles turned so slowly that we hardly realized gradual change. Now we can scarely keep peace mentally, physically or spiritually, and because we seem to be geared to the maintenance of the status quo, we resist change, fiercely and stubbornly.

It is not only in great cities that changes are to be found. One need only glance through any of the foremost religious magazines to realize that profound changes are taking place in religious thought.

Such headlines as "Is Religion Adequate for the Times?" "In Defense of the Resurrection," "Is God Really Dead?" and "God Versus Science," surely indicate that there is within the Church itself a deep spirit of questioning concern as it seeks ways and means of making the message clear and plain within the framework of today's life and thought.

It is important to note that these are not the questions of the unbeliever, the non-churchgoer of the agnostic. They are being asked by the clergy and the laity, by Salvation Army officers and soldiers, by men and women actively and urgently seeking to relate the gospel to the whole of 20th century living.

We are painfull aware that the church has for a long time not been "speaking to the condition of men." Beautiful and meaningful as they are to the believer, the majestic phrases of the King James Version of the Bible are only meaningless jargon to one hearing them for the first time. The young Salvationist whose oral witness is expressed in the language of 19th century Methodism will be neither understood nor tolerated by today's youth.

"Are You Running With Me, Jesus?" is the somewhat shocking title of a book of "pop" prayers compiled by an Anglican clergyman for teen-age members of his congregation. Here is the first prayer:

"It's morning, Jesus. I've got to move fast -- get washed, grab a bite to eat and rush some more. Where am I running? You know these things I can't understand. It's not that I need to have you tell me. What counts most is just that someone knows, and it's you. That helps me. So I'll follow along, okey? But lead, Lord. Now I've got to run. Are you running with me, Jesus?"

Are you shocked? Don't be. This is the heart to heart conversation of a teen-age boy with his Lord. He has found a Friend and a Brother, and he is communicating as he runs.

It might even be that he is getting through to God, and God is getting through to him, better than one who kneels and utters carefully formulated prayers in impeccable 17th Century English with no real intent of soul.

You will address God always as Thou, and your soul will be refreshed and blessed as you read the loved verses of the King James Version. But do not withhold your understanding and your blessing from those who, like Jesus Himself in His day, seek by desperate means to tell the good news of God in the language of the age in which they live. Brigadier Christine E. McMillan.

CHAR-BROILED BEEF

It's time to bring out the barbecue grill, put on the charcoal and treat your family to summertime cookout fun.

Memorial Day is an excellent time to begin, June's National Barbecue Month, and Dad can be "Chef for a Day" come June 18 - Father's Day.

Appropriately, beef, an all-time barbecue favorite is in good supply right now. In fact, it has been on the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Plentiful Foods List since April.

USDA reports that federally inspected beef production during the first quarter of 1967 is seven percent greater than last year's record large amount for the same period.

With all that beef, many of the best barbecuing cuts should be reasonably priced. Ground beef and beef cubes for shish kebabs will be particular favorites. But don't forget tantalizing porterhouse, T-bone, sirloin, rib-eye or strip steaks. Of course, barbecued filet mignon makes mighty fine eating, while top round steak, marinated, then broiled, can make taste buds sit up and take notice. Rolled rib and high quality rolled rump roasts as well as tenderloin also make suitable barbeque fare.

U.S. Prime and U.S. Choice grade beef is recommended for barbecuing says USDA's Consumer and Marketing Service. Cuts from these grades are larger, have more marbling for tenderness, and, in general, make for more tasty eating.

Plan to combine beef and charcoal for your family - soon!

SOUND ADVICE FROM A SOPRANO — "You'll be adding red, white and blue notes to your financial range when you sign up for U.S. Savings Bonds," says Olivia Bonelli, lyric soprano star of opera, oratorio and concert. "Buy them through Payroll Savings where you work or on the Bond-A-Month Plan where you bank."

The National Geographic Society's first expedition was a survey of Mt. St. Elias, Alaska, in 1890.

THE USS ST. FRANCIS RIVER has celebrated its first year on the Vietnam gunline.

USS St. Francis on Vietnam Gunline

The USS St. Francis River celebrated its first year on the Vietnam gunline by firing 25,000th five inch spin stabilized rocket in support of the third brigade, 25th Army infantry division operation Oregon, 25 miles southeast of Quang Ngai City, I Corps.

Lacking only 41 rounds for the magic number, the plotting room team took special care in plotting a fast solution for the airborne Anglico navel gunfire spotter. The launcher crews loaded the hand painted rockets emblazed with "Sat Cong," the ship's motto. At the command "fire," the special "stanley steamers", which have struck justifiable fear in the ranks of the Viet Cong, were on their way.

At the same time the ship unlimbered her secondary 5"/38 and 40MM batteries on two separate enemy fortified positions. All rounds blanketed the three targets. Before the final "cease fire" gave the launchers and guns a chance to cool, the ship fired over 400 rockets, and more than 1500 rounds of 5"/38 and 40MM projectiles.

The enemy did not enjoy the anniversary celebration. Covering eight targets, 120 structures, 18 sampans and trench lines were destroyed. The enemy took 30 killed in the action by body count.

The St. Francis River, nicknamed the "Rocket Rainmaker", fired the first rocket mission since the Korean War, just one year before only a few miles North along the coast. Operating in support of every national force in Vietnam, from the DMZ to the rivers of the Mekong Delta, the ship has accounted for over 1000 confirmed enemy casualties and over 5000 structures destroyed or damaged.

Named for the Missouri - Arkansas River which flows south to the Mississippi, the St. Francis River is sponsored by the city of Poplar Bluff. The Pacific amphibious force "Ship of the Year", she was named 4th runnerup in a Navy-wide selection for the same honor.

A veteran of numerous engagements and bombardments in the Korean War, the St. Francis River has been commanded by Lt. Frederick N. Mangol of Detroit, since her reactivation from the mothball fleet in 1965.

The Mason - Dixon Line was drawn in 1767 to end a bitter colonial land dispute. It extends from east to west between Pennsylvania and Maryland, with a shorter branch reaching southward then east between Maryland and Delaware. All three states were on the Union side during the Civil War.

Bullet Grazes Motorist's Head

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A motorist was shot today and a city ordinance which allows right turns on red traffic signals in some sections of the city was apparently involved.

One area where the right turn on red is not allowed is in the downtown St. Louis area.

Clark Fisher, 37, was driving downtown early today with his wife and two friends. He stopped for a red light and didn't move when a driver behind him honked his horn enthusiastically.

When the light turned green there was an exhange of words between the two cars followed by several shots from the second car, police said.

Fisher's passengers ducke excaped injury but a bullet grazed the side of his head. He was treated for a superficial wound. The other driver quickly left the area.

Justice is truth in action.

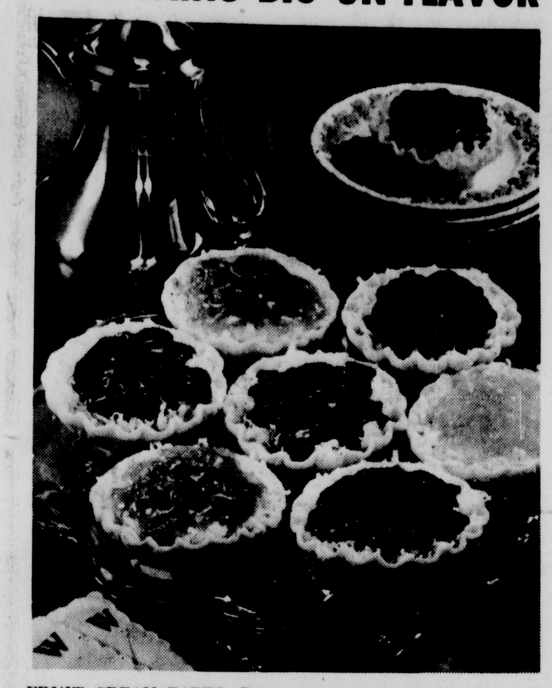
TINY TARTS BIG ON FLAVOR



FRUIT CREAM TARTS. Pretty party tarts are easy to make with mixes and preserves. In the tarts, made from pastry mix, is vanilla pudding also made from a mix, topped with different color and flavor preserves and a sprinkle of flaked coconut.

These Fruit Cream Tarts look so elegant they spell p-a-r-t-y, but they're quick and easy to make if you start out with tarts made from a pie crust mix. Underneath the luscious preserve topping is a creamy vanilla pudding made from an instant pudding mix, and around the preserves is flaked coconut.

Serve them on your most elegant glass or silverware with hot, very black coffee and your guests will be delighted with these pretty little pastries.

For added color appeal, vary the preserves you use from yellow-orange (marmalade, apricot, peach, or pineapple preserves) to red or purple (strawberry, raspberry, or grape jelly or preserves).

FRUIT CREAM TARTS

- 1 package (3¾ ounce) vanilla instant pudding mix
- Milk
- 1 cup flaked coconut
- 8 to 12 baked tart shells (about 3½ inch diameter)
- 1 jar (12 ounce) favorite preserves or marmalade or favorite assortment of preserves

Prepare pudding mix with milk as directed on package. Let thicken slightly. Fill tart shells ⅔ full with pudding mix. Sprinkle 1 to 2 tablespoons coconut over pudding. Chill until pudding is set. Spoon preserves or marmalade over coconut and pudding. Yield: 8 to 12 tarts.

A "Husband-Winning" Dessert

Can she bake a cherry pie? Tradition has it that an affirmative answer to this question is the mark of a marriageable girl. If you have trouble producing a "husband-catching pie", then try this Deep Dish Cherry Pudding. It's absolutely error proof and so yummy he'll never notice that it's not "pie shaped".

The crust is a flavorful combination of crushed cookies and spices and canned cherry pie filling which eliminates the tricky cooking of cherries.

Deep Dish Cherry Pudding

- 1 (10-ounce) package LORNA DOONE Shortbread, finely rolled
- 1½ teaspoons ground cinnamon
- ½ teaspoon ground allspice
- 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
- 2 (1 pound, 6 ounce) cans cherry pie filling
- ¼ cup chopped walnuts
- Whipped cream or ice cream

Combine the first three ingredients. Reserve ⅔ cup for topping. Spoon remaining into a buttered 8-inch square cake pan. Press firmly against bottom with back of a spoon. Stir lemon rind into cherry pie filling. Spoon over crust. Toss nuts with reserved crumb mixture; sprinkle over top. Bake in a preheated moderate oven (350° F.) 30 to 35 minutes. Serve warm or cooled. Top with sweetened whipped heavy cream or ice cream if desired. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Peak Of Perfection

It's hard to find a dessert more popular than fragrant strawberries, luscious in their juicy sweetness. There just never seems to be quite enough of them to really satisfy the craving! However, there are some delicious ways to extend strawberries without masking their incomparable flavor. One of the most delectable of these is Cream Cheese Halo with Strawberries. It's a smooth, cloud-light mold characterized by the delicate piquancy of cream cheese—a perfect medium to set off the rich taste and color of the fruit. It's pretty enough for parties but so simple to prepare that you'll want to feature it on family menus, too, to take full advantage of strawberries at their quality peak.

Cream Cheese Halo With Strawberries

- 1 envelope unflavored gelatin
- ¼ cup cold water
- 1 8-oz. pkg. cream cheese
- ½ cup sugar
- ½ teaspoon almond extract
- Dash of salt
- 1¼ cups milk
- 1 cup heavy cream, whipped
- 1 pint strawberries

Soften gelatin in cold water; dissolve over hot water. Combine softened cream cheese, sugar, almond extract and salt, mixing until well blended. Gradually add milk and gelatin. Chill until slightly thickened. Fold in whipped cream; pour into a 1-quart ring mold; chill until firm. Unmold; fill center with strawberries.

Hot Sandwich Takes Ham, Sauce Cornbread Base

You can make it ham on rye with plenty of mustard if you want a sandwich cold, but if you like one that's warm make it ham in creamy mushroom sauce on cornbread squares!

With ham so popular in sandwiches, wise homemakers usually purchase a half or whole ham in a size larger than for the group expected for dinner, explains Reba Staggs, meat expert.

With this amount of ham, it's easy to obtain leftover slices for sandwiches to be served, either hot or cold, at the first meal after the main dinner. After the slices, there remain pieces to use in casseroles or creamed dishes. Should it be a bone-in type of ham, this could be used for soup with green or yellow split peas. All in all, ham can come to several meals, each time in a different guise.

Cornbread is a quick and easy recipe to make for a sandwich with milk and beaten egg added to dry ingredients along with lard to make it tender. The batter should not be overmixed.

Southern Ham Sandwich

8 slices cooked ham, warmed
1 can (10¾ ounces) condensed mushroom soup
½ cup milk
½ teaspoon onion juice
¾ cup cooked peas
8 cornbread squares

Combine condensed mushroom soup, milk and onion juice. Add cooked peas and heat thoroughly. Top each cornbread square with a slice of ham. Spoon mushroom soup mixture over ham allowing about ¼ cup for each sandwich. 8 servings.

Cornbread

1 egg
1¼ cups milk
½ cup sifted flour
1½ cups corn meal
2 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons lard, melted

Beat egg until thick and lemon colored. Add milk, dry ingredients and lard. Beat until smooth. Pour into greased 8 x 8-inch pan. Bake in a hot oven (400° F.) 25 to 30 minutes. Cut cornbread into 4 x 4-inch pieces. Remove from pan and split each piece in half making 8 cornbread squares.

Ginger Seasons Tasty Beef Cut Called Brisket

Fresh beef brisket makes pot-roast when it's braised. It will seem related to a famous dish called sauerbraten when spices like ginger and cloves season it.

Much of the beef brisket that's sold is cured and goes under the name of "corned beef." It has characteristic flavor and color (bright red), when cooked. Brisket which is not cured is the same boneless cut, points out meat authority, Reba Staggs, but is dipped in seasoned flour before browning and cooked by moist heat.

Beef Brisket — Ginger Gravy

3 to 4 pound beef brisket
⅓ cup flour
2 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon ginger
½ teaspoon ground cloves
¼ teaspoon thyme
3 tablespoons lard or drippings
½ cup water
2 tablespoons lemon juice
3 medium onions, sliced
¼-inch thick
½ to ¾ cup water

Combine flour, salt, pepper, ginger, cloves and thyme. Dredge brisket in seasoned flour. Save remaining flour for thickening gravy. Brown brisket on all sides in lard or drippings. Pour off drippings. Add ¾ cup water, lemon juice and sliced onions. Cover tightly and cook slowly 3 to 3½ hours or until tender. Remove brisket and measure cooking liquid. Add water to cooking liquid to make 3 cups. Thicken with remaining seasoned flour to which ¼ to ½ cup water is added to make a smooth liquid. Add flour mixture to cooking liquid. Cook, stirring constantly, until boiled and thickened. Serve with brisket.

Boost for Breakfast

Here's something different to do with scrambled eggs for a first meal of the day: cream a (3 ounce) package of cream cheese until fluffy, then add slowly a cup of scalded milk. Season with salt and pepper. Add 6 eggs which have been beaten slightly. Melt lard or drippings in frying-pan, then add 1 cup cubed leftover ham or luncheon meat to cook with the eggs. Cook slowly stirring only until eggs are set.

This ham and egg breakfast dish is delightful served with toasted English muffin, cinnamon buns or toast.

Garnish for Ham or Pork

Make kabobs of cooked or canned sweet potatoes, alternating them with pineapple chunks and maraschino cherries. Brush with melted butter or margarine and let bake during the last 10 minutes of roasting time. Serve on the same platter with baked ham or pork roast.

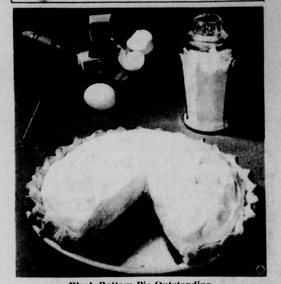
GOLDEN TOUCH OF HOSPITALITY

BY JANE ASHLEY



Black Bottom Pie Outstanding

One of the most elegant desserts you can serve is Black Bottom Pie which consists of a chocolate-flavored bottom layer, topped with a rum-flavored custard layer. The distinctive results are worth extra effort, as it's delicate flavor and texture are sure to reap compliments as you serve it on very special occasions.

Black Bottom Pie

1 baked 9-inch pastry shell	¼ cup light rum or orange juice
1 envelope unflavored gelatin	½ cup light corn syrup
¼ cup cold water	1½ ounces unsweetened chocolate, melted
1 cup sugar	1 teaspoon vanilla
3 tablespoons corn starch	4 egg whites
½ teaspoon salt	¼ teaspoon cream of tartar
2 cups milk
4 egg yolks, slightly beaten

Sprinkle gelatin over cold water; let soften. Combine ½ cup sugar, corn starch and salt in double boiler top. Gradually add milk, stirring until smooth. Cook over boiling water, stirring constantly, until thickened. Cover; cook 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Meanwhile, prepare pastry. Stir a little hot mixture over boiling water. Cook 2 minutes, stirring occasionally. Remove from boiling water. Measure ¾ cup mixture into large bowl. Blend in softened gelatin, stirring until gelatin is completely dissolved. Mix in rum. Stir corn syrup into remaining custard, then blend in chocolate and vanilla. Pour chocolate custard into pastry shell. Beat egg whites with cream of tartar until soft peaks form when beater is raised. Gradually add remaining ½ cup sugar, beating until stiff peaks form. Fold into rum custard. Pour on top of chocolate custard in pastry shell. Chill.

Food for Americans

Add Lemon Butter To New Potatoes

By GAYNOR MADDOX
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

New potatoes, one of the joys of spring, need nothing more than a touch of salt and a little butter. But now and then, just for a change, serve them with butter sauces for an extra fillip.

BOILED NEW POTATOES WITH BUTTER SAUCE

1½ pounds new potatoes
Butter sauce
1 teaspoon salt

Wash potatoes, scrape or pare or, if desired, cook in jackets. Place in saucepan with an inch of boiling water and salt. Cover and bring to boiling point. Boil until tender, 25 to 40 minutes, depending on size. Drain until dry and serve plain with butter and black pepper to taste or with one of the following sauces. Makes 6 servings.

FRESH LEMON BUTTER: Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Add 1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice, ¼-teaspoon salt and ⅛-teaspoon ground black pepper.

HERBED BUTTER: Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine and add ¼-teaspoon crumbled basil leaves, caraway seed, powdered mustard or onion powder.

NEW POTATOES SAUTEED

Wash and scrape 2 pounds small new potatoes. Heat 2 tablespoons salad oil in heavy skillet. Add potatoes, shake pan to coat all sides with oil. Cover and cook slowly over low heat, 30 to 40 minutes or until tender, shaking pan occasionally to cook uniformly. Sprinkle with salt and ground black pepper to taste and chopped fresh parsley or chives. Serve very hot. Makes 6 servings.

Cereal Ice Cream Parfaits

Surveys among homemakers and teen-age girls, who frequently skip or skimp breakfast, reveal that one reason given is "just not hungry in the morning." This is when mom's ingenuity is put to the test.

For example, a basic cereal and milk breakfast is a convenient, adaptable meal which suits the needs of all family members, with little effort. It can be prepared in the time it takes to make the coffee. Yet, when that springtime craving for something different but equally quick to prepare is wanted, Cereal Ice Cream Parfaits offer a delightful solution.

Even teen-agers can take over in preparing such a breakfast. Just spoon crisp, ready-to-eat cereal, such as whole wheat flakes, in parfait glasses, alternating with spoonfuls of vanilla ice cream and sliced, sweetened strawberries. Garnish the tops with a few sliced berries. Add buttered toast, orange juice, and glass of milk for a nutritionally adequate meal.

Prayer Breaks All Chains

by
The Rev. Richard Wurmbrand

Dear brethren, dear sisters, and you very dear children: I will tell you out of my experience something of the value of prayer.

I had been in my youth a militant atheist. I was sure that there was no God; but I saw that my mind very often made mistakes. And I wondered if I was not mistaken in this question.

I was sure that there was no God, but I would have liked very much that there should be a God. I had a bitter childhood, a very difficult youth; and I would have liked that somewhere in the center of this universe a heart should beat lovingly for me.

A convinced atheistic being, I prayed for the first time with the following words: "God, I know surely that you do not exist, but if perchance you exist, which I contest, I speak in madness to a God in whose existence I don't believe. If you exist, it is your duty to reveal yourself to me."

This prayer was answered, I heard afterwards that at the same time, far away in a village high up in the mountains in Rumania, a carpenter who had never seen me prayed, substantially, like this:

"God, I have served Thee on earth, and I wish to have my reward on earth and not in heaven. And my reward should be that I should not die before I bring someone to you. But I am old, too sick and I can't go around and see this particular last soul I seek. In my village there are none of the faith I want to convert to Christianity. Bring one into our village and I will bring him to Christ."

An impulse which I can't explain took me to that village just at that time. I met this carpenter and he brought me to Christ. The prayer of an atheist was fulfilled by God.

And now out of regret for my past atheistic life, I asked God to give me the possibility to atone for it by witnessing for Christ to the Russians who are brought up in atheistic manner. For years I have prayed to witness to the Russians. This prayer has also been fulfilled.

Over a million Russian soldiers occupied our country. We could print secretly -- and distribute among them -- thousands of gospels and other Christian literature. And I must tell you that to preach the gospel to Russians is heaven on earth.

We here in the West are blase. We can yawn while reading about the Passion of Christ. But the Russians absorb the gospel as a sponge. It is thirsty soil. We could baptize Russians; we could bring them to Christ.

So the second great prayer of mine has been fulfilled.

The day that I was ordained as a pastor I made a third prayer to God:

"God, if I am allowed to choose for myself a parish, I would like very much to be pastor of a prison."

This desire also have been fulfilled. I became pastor of a prison because I had to pass many years, first in fascist and then in Communist prisons.

It was really a very beautiful parish. It was not one with great income in money, but God was with us; Christ was with us. And it was an unspeakable joy to be able to preach the gospel by Morse Code through the wall when you were in solitary confinement, and to bring souls to Christ in this manner -- to be able to comfort the dying, tortured prisoners.

For two and a half years I was in the cell of dying ones -- sick ones -- sick myself, very sick. Not one died in this cell without having accepted Christ as his Savior. A third great prayer of mine had been fulfilled.

I have had a fourth great prayer. When I became a pastor I had a very good social position. The only thing which I missed was a cross. When, as often as I got my salary and furniture and all kinds of such things, my wife and I asked:

"God, you give us so many gifts but can't we get a cross from you? We would like that a time should come when you will give us nothing -- that we may be able to show you that we love you and not your gifts."

This prayer also has been fulfilled.

There have been horrible times in Communist prisons, times when Christians were tied to crosses four days and four nights. These crosses were put on the floor and the Christians subjected to indignities which I cannot relate to this (LIFE LINE) radio audience. (For details of Reverend Wurmbrand's 14-year imprisonment and torture by Rumanian Communists -- his own word testimony to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee --see LIFE LINES, Vol. 8, July 8)

The Communists would then hold up the crosses with the crucified prisoners: "Look at your Christ," they would jeer and mock, "See how beautiful He is!"

In those moments I got from God nothing -- and we could love not His gifts but Him during these years. And it was such a strengthening of our faith.

We had in prison a time when we could not pray at all. We were indescribably hungry. We had only one slice of bread a week. We were doped with drugs which broke our wills. We Christian prisoners were beaten and tortured. We could not pray. But when we could not pray any more, then also we knew the power of prayer.

Communists could not conquer us. We felt (as if) a wind were coming to us from far away with the prayers of thousands of faithful Christians who prayed for us when we could not pray.

We could not concentrate, our minds. We were too hungry. But the whole Christian church is one body, and one member of this body takes up the function which the other can't fulfill. We could -- there behind the iron curtain -- suffer for the universal church. Another part of the universal church could pray for us when we were broken down and indescribably weak; we could be strong before our oppressors by the prayers which others offered for us.

I ask you, dear brethren and dear sisters, and specially you very dear children:

Don't forget in your prayers those who suffered behind the iron and bamboo curtains.

Prayer strengthens. Prayer conquers. Prayer helps.

Pray for us as we there behind the iron curtain -- sometimes with 50-pound chains at our feet -- have prayed for you.

Amen.

The two fronts - In commenting on the Administration waging war on two fronts, in Viet Nam and the United States, Rep. Paul Fino (R.-N.Y.) says, "The war at home represents a war on self - help, a war on fixed income, a war on respect for law and order, and a war on middle - class morality, a war on purchasing power, a war on the neighborhood school. I'm for ripping the general's insignia from the shoulders of the social planners."

The Side Of The Angels

By Brigadier Christine E. McMillan (R)

THE MANAGER of the Hoot Owls never knew why he did it. Tommy was the team's worst player. He just came along with the Little League--well, because. He told his mother he wasn't really a player, "just bench strength." And he didn't expect to last long at that.

The Hoot Owls were playing a team from the next town had been a long, hard - fought game, and the score was tied. The next boy in the batting order had just hurt his hand and, looking around wildly, the manager's eyes fell on Tommy. Before either of them quite knew what was happening, Tommy was at bat. And the amazing, totally unexpected home run he hit gave the Hoot Owls the game. "Just bench strength?" said his mother sometime later. "Some bench strength!"

Most of us, come right down to it, are just bench strength. We feel sometimes that our voices count very little in the affairs of the world or of our communities.

We are the mothers, perhaps, who feel somewhat "out of it" as the world rushes by the front door while we bind up Johnny's knee, take Susie to the dentist, stretch the budget another inch or seek to comfort a neighbor.

We are the average men and women of the world, living out our lives with what courage and fortitude we can summon, participating in the life of the community, sharing in the corporate life of the Church, and trying to know God's way for us, and through Him to come to terms with our own spirit.

But are we just "bench strength?" Just those who sit on the sidelines of life? Just "waiters" for a chance to make some spectacular play? No, indeed not! We are those upon whom the world depends. When the challenge is thrown down in a day of crisis, it is we who can choose whether we shall accept it in righteousness, or neglect it to our ruin. When the unworthy, the base and the corrupt confront us, and ours is the choice, we, the people, have the right to choose "which side shall feel the stubborn ounces of our weight." There are the leaders, of course. There are the wise and the great and the mighty. But they would fade away and be no more were it not for the rest of us who make it possible for them to lead.

None of us who should ever feel that any effort we make toward the betterment of an individual, the community, or the world at large is of no avail. Every child that is loved and cherished, every lonely spirit cheered, every downcast and discouraged husband uplifted and strengthened, every woman who knows she is loved and understood, every lesson of truth and goodness taught and learned, every act of self-denial and love -- every one of these efforts, added to the sum total of human endeavor, is vital and all - important.

And even at the spirit's lowest ebb, when we might truly feel that our efforts have failed or are of little value, we can still say, with Bonaro W. Overstreet:

"You say the little efforts that I make
Will do no good.
They never will prevail,
To tip the hovering scale
Where justice hangs in balance.
I don't think
I ever thought they would.
But I am prejudiced beyond debate
In favor of my right to choose which side
Shall feel the stubborn ounces of my weight."

It's one thing to be neutral; it's another to be on the side of the angels where all of our efforts are enlarged and multiplied as God uses them to work out His own will and purpose in the world.

THE PERFECT ASSIST

When my mother came to northern Alberta from the green shores of Ireland, she felt the cold. A trapper friend of my father's saved special unusually fine skins to make a beautiful coat for the young bride. She wore it proudly for years.

Then our family moved to the warm, pleasant climate of Vancouver, B. C. My mother treasured the coat as a memory -- but she didn't really need it. A few months before the Hungarian revolt of 1956 she sent it to the Red Cross, fastening into the pocket a note requesting the future owner to give her a few details about the much - prized coat. A year passed, and my mother heard nothing. She thought the coat had been lost or stolen along the way. Then came a letter, in Hungarian, from a priest wanted by the communists. A friend had smuggled in the coat when the borders were relatively unguarded; the priest, dressed as a woman and using the fur coat as a disguise, had escaped to freedom. Meantime, he found the note and had it translated to him. The letter thanked my mother for saving his life.

"Guns and Butter, Too"

By DAVID LAWRENCE

President Johnson ended two months of quandary and, in his address to Congress, made a fateful decision -- that America can afford "guns and butter, too." He evidently feels that the domestic economy can support a deficits as unprecedented sums are spent for the "Great Society." Will Congress also take that gamble?

The President's statements seemed to reiterate a spending-as-usual policy. He spoke of expensive measures needed to improve "the quality of life" for all Americans, to transform decaying slums, to fight for clean air and water, to help rebuilt our cities, and to beautify America.

Mr. Johnson said that, during the past three years, about 40 billion dollars has been returned to State and local governments in grants-in-aid. He added:

"These enormous sums must be used wisely, honestly, and effectively. We intend to work closely with the States and localities to do exactly that."

Does this mean that the Federal Government is, in effect, to take over the States and use the power of the purse to influence local action?

The President brushed aside any thought of wage-and-price controls. He expressed concern about what he calls "the excessive rise in interest rates and a tightening of credit" which has put burdens on home buyers and home builders. jbut he claimed that price stability has seemingly been restored.

Mr. Johnson urged that our sociological programs at home and American aid abroad be continued. He proposed that, to help pay for these and the higher costs of the Vietnam war, there be a tax increase.

The "surcharge" plan to add 6 per cent to the existing tax bill of the individual or corporation will bring in between 4 and 5 billion dollars a year. But nevertheless fiscal year 1967 will show a deficit of 9.7 billion dollars, and the estimate for 1968 is a deficit of 8.1 billion.

There are critics, including Senator John J. Williams, Republican of Delaware, who say that even these revised estimates do not give a true picture of the deficit spending and that, under customary accounting methods, it would be more accurate to put the 1967 deficit at 18.8 billion dollars.

The economic situation is likely to remain uncertain until the Vietnam war is ended. While increased taxes may be necessary, even more important is a curtailment of expenditures apart from defense.

The President's comments on international problems were pointed. He reviewed developments around the world, and expressed the belief that American policies are making substantial progress. He even took an optimistic view of the relations between the United States and the Soviet Union and Communist-bloc countries of Eastern Europe. He said emphatically: "Our objective is not to continue the cold war, but to end it."

In one part of the message, the President spoke bitterly about Communist aggression, but he somehow ignored this when he advocated new East-West trade agreements. It seems incredible that he would be urging such steps when the Moscow Government is supplying MIGs to the North Vietnamese to kill American boys. The theory presumably is that the Soviets will be persuaded to diminish their aid and eventually to terminate it. This is diplomatic gambling.

The President also deplored the enlargment by the Russians of their missile program and indicated a hope that the Moscow Government can be prevailed upon not to start a new round in the arms race. But should the United States take a big risk in the meantime and sacrifice American security by continuing to spend billions for "butter" that might instead be used to build, for instance, a stronger antimissile defense as recommended unanimously by the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff?

For the danger of a third world war has by no means been lessened. The President said in his message:

"We have chosen to fight a limited war in Vietnam in an attempt to prevent a larger war-a war almost certain to follow, if the Communists succeed in overrunning and taking over South Vietnam by aggression and by force. I believe, and I am supported by some authority, that if they are not checked now, the world can expect to pay a greater price to check them later. . . .

"Our adversary still believes I think, tonight, that he can go on fighting longer than we can, and longer than we and our allies will be prepared to stand up and resist."

The President's words on Vietnam were resolute. Despite the carping comments of ill-informed critics, the American people recognize truth, and realize that the only way by which we can assure the safety of the people of the United States -- and protect them against another war - is to achieve our objectives in Vietnam.

But when will the Administration face the economic facts? Can we today really afford "guns and butter, too"?

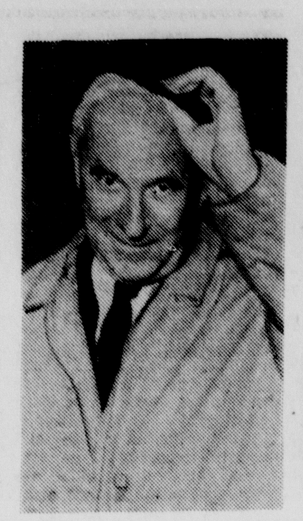
"GIVE ME A PLACE TO STAND . . . . . AND I'LL MOVE THE EARTH."

2200 years ago, Archimedes--the Greek mathematician and practical inventor -- was crying out in frustration. Through the discipline of his studies, he recognized ar i dabbled as best he could in the basic principles of many of today's accepted mechanical phenomena. He wished he could do more.

What might he have done with that great servant of today's construction industry -- compressed air? Unknown as a practical thing to the ancients, as a tool it still hadn't been "invented" as late as a mere 200 years ago. Indeed, for 2000 years after Archimedes, practical progress was slow in all fields.



(NEA Radio-Telephoto)

Hamstrung as he was only 200 years ago by the lack of sufficient power where and when he wanted it, the 18th century builder's workshop -- as seen in this sketch -- must have been an inferno. No just from the heat of the open furnace used to soften metals for forming, but from the ear-piercing noise of the crude hammering mechanism driven directly by a water-wheel shaft (Y), the wheezing and blowing of the furnace's bellows, the creaking and groaning of the giant water wheel, the clanging of the four cams on the shaft against the iron band under the hammer (r), the crash of the falling hammer itself, and undoubtedly the cursing of the men when, as often happened, the material to be worked wasn't hot enough or the hammer was too slow.

What would we do today without portable pneumatic tools for chipping, riveting, caulking, rock drilling, concrete breaking, and sand ramming? How well could we get along on our construction sites and in temporary open-air shops without heavy air-powered tools for driving, drilling, reaming, tapping, grinding, buffing, expanding, and cleaning?

We have come a long way since Archimedes -- these last 200 years especially. If he could return to this world, the old Greek would be jealous of the powerful earth-moving and other construction techniques we have at our disposal today.

Today Is Tuesday

This new park on the southern approach to Manistee, Michigan is but part of the work of the Tuesday Committee, composed of hundreds of citizens interested in rejuvenating their city.

It was Tuesday and a group of friends who met every Tuesday to lunch together were gathered around a restaurant table. The conversation turned to the appalling appearance of their town, Manistee, Mich. and, as the men discussed, they also resolved to do something about it. Forthwith they formed a committee, calling it for the day of the week — the Tuesday Committee.

Eyesores included rundown buildings around town, especially along the waterfront on the Manistee River, just 2 blocks from where it meets Lake Michigan and an inhospitable approach to the city from the south. There was also a general lack of "caring" by property owners.

To arouse public interest, the help of the local newspaper, the "News-Advocate," was solicited. Every Tuesday the paper published (and still publishes) a picture of one or another substandard buildings, with no text beneath, but always with the heading, "Today is Tuesday."

After 6 months of these weekly pictures with no explanation, members of the Tuesday Committee called a public meeting at which they explained their ideas and asked that each resident present join the committee in its efforts. After the meeting one resident asked, "You mean that even if I just mow my lawn I'm a member of the Tuesday Committee"? and was told that he was correct.

Results were amazing. Owners of eyesores pictured in the newspaper rebuilt and painted the structures. Then they planted flowers around them to beautify them. Even absentee landlords, contacted by mail and sent pictures of their holdings, spruced up their properties or, if they were beyond repair, tore down the buildings.

The 5 original members of the Tuesday Committee borrowed funds, bought 2 blocks of buildings along the waterfront, paid for their removal and then deeded the frontage along the river to the town for $1. Plans for a marina are being completed and the marina will be constructed this year.

The approach to the city was cleared of trash and members of the high school senior class, inspired by the actions of their elders, gave up their usual senior trip to Washington, D. C. Instead, they used the time to plant beds of petunias along the highway.

Last year half a cent was offered for each bottle or can picked up along the roads. This offer was broadcast by the radio station, featured by the newspaper and advertised by a 12-foot sign. On the appointed day, when all debris was dumped on the former site of the city hall, the Jaycees, who received it, paid out over $700! This event will be repeated this year.

Property adjoining the city at the southern approach has been acquired, a landscape architect was retained to draw plans, and a park constructed. Maintained by the city, this park will serve as a lasting monument to the work of a dedicated group of men — the founders of the Tuesday Committee.

We Can Never Know

BY BRIGADIER CHRISTINE E. McMILLAN

Today nobody remembers him. Had he lived, he would be a centenarian. He was unmarried, so no direct descendants are living to remember his name.

Oscar Trenhour lived in Shenandoah, Pennsylvania. The Army came there in 1885, and Oscar became a Christian and a Salvationist through its ministry.

A year later he died. The day of his funeral was dark and stormy, but 150 people marched to his home where a service was held. His body, as was then was the custom, was "marched" to the Army hall where another service was held, after which they marched on to the cemetery, the soldiers singing softly as they went, "Shall we gather at the river. . .?"

In the memorial service that night, Oscar's father and brother gave their hearts and lives to Christ and his mother followed a few days later.

"It was worth the Army coming to Shenandoah if only for the example of this young man's life," said the corps officer, Captain E. T. Brown, also long forgotten, in his War Cry report.

Life seems often to be haphazard, formless, without direction or meaning, yet again and again one is astounded to see how the apparently unrelated bits and pieces fit with accuracy and meaning to form a perfect mosiac.

And not only do the beautifully colored or well-shaped pieces find their appointed places but the asymmetrical, drab or violently - colored pieces have also their place, without which the whole would be neither complete nor authentic.

I wondered, after reading by chance about young Oscar Trenhour in an old volume of The War Cry, just how far the influence of his Christian witness went.

Could there be men and women living in Shenandoah today -- or in some distant part of the world -- who, all unknowing, have reason to bless the name of Oscar Trenhour? A doctor, perhaps, a teacher, a clergyman, a mother bringing up her children to know God's love, a scientist dedicated to the betterment of mankind, a poet, a writer, an artist . . . men and women who became what they are and contribute to the world their gifts and graces, through a witness given by a young man long since forgotten, to people long since dead.

Nearly a hundred years ago a Jewish peddler called Mausche drove his donkey cart through the lovely Munster valley of Alsace-Lorraine. The children of the little town of Gunsbach jeered and laughed at the Jewish peddler and his donkey. They held him up to ridicule and showered him with abuse.

One child stood apart from the rest, pain and pity in his small heart. Years later this child wrote in his Memories of Childhood and Youth, "He went forward as calmly as his donkey. He just turned round and smiled kindly and with an air of embarrassment.

"And," continued Albert Schweitzer, "he taught me for the first time what it is to be silent under a storm of persecution. He became indeed one of my great teachers."

The peddler Mausche never knew that his gentle witness was to profoundly affect the life of the great doctor to the Africans, and neither do you or I ever begin to know the strength or the extent of our most weak and faltering witness to the reality of the Christian life.

Our Lord told us that His Kingdom did not come "with observation." It is the silent, wonderful work of His spirit in the human heart. If He could bless a few fish and loaves of bread to thousands of people, what will He do with a loving, dedicated heart and life?

THOUGHTS

Does thinking pay? I'd say it depends
Upon what one things about;
If a man his time unwisely spends
In grievance and self- doubt--
If he frets about the morrow,
If he yearns for yesterday.
He surely will know sorrow,
Negative thinking breeds decay.
But if he should be such a sage
That he would benefit
From past mistakes, turning the page
With gumption and with grit
To face the future unafraid--
I'd think his type of thinking paid.

A jet pilot stationed at Lockbourne Air Force Base, Ohio, asks his children to take turns saying the blessing before meals.

Recently, when one of the children ended his blessing with the traditional "Amen," he turned to his sister and asked, "What does amen mean?"

"Amen," answered the well-brought-up Air Force daughter, "Is the same as saying 'Over and out.'"

WHAT IS LIFE?

Spires outlast spears. Altars are more lasting than armaments. To the man who thinks, life is comedy; to the man who feels, life is tragedy; but to the man who believes, life is victory. Anonymous

The Wonders of the World

STONEHENGE
Britain's Greatest Antiquity

Because of the relative isolation of Britain from the so-called civilized world until the advent of the Christian era, no mention is made of the great pile of huge stones arranged in a circle that is Stonehenge, by anyone who lived in the ancient world of the Mediterranean. But Stonehenge would surely have been called one of the wonders of the world, had it been known to classical writers.

The source of the 80 or more four - ton bluestone monoliths has been traced, by petrological identification, to an area of about one square mile in the Prescelly Mountains in what is today western Wales - a distance from Stonehenge in south central England, as the crow flies, of some 135 miles.

Solving of the technical problems involved in transporting these tremendous boulders and setting them up at Stonehenge around 1700 B.C. -- by primitive tribes unaided by axled wheels, strong pack animals, or builders' tools of any consequence -- as well as the tooling of the stones, passes our present - day understanding of this unrecorded era in history.

At its fullest development as a meeting place -- perhaps around 1,000 B.C. -- Stonehenge had become an important shrine where the Druid - worshiping inhabitants of the region held seasonal and religious festivals and other regularly scheduled events during the course of a year.

Stonehenge at the same time served as the people's official calendar.

The seasons of the year were determined by the angle at which the sun's rays penetrated the openings in the big circle of stones. In the middle of a smaller center circle of stones stood (and still stands) the Hele-Stone, or sun-stone. At the moment of sunrise on the longest day of the year, June 21, the sun seems to rest on this one stone like a ball of fire.

In 55 B.C. Julius Caesar invaded Britain. He did not conquer it, but visited it with his army and described it in books when he got back to Rome. A hundred years later the Romans sent an army to really take England, which it did. It is soon afterwards that Stonehenge was badly damaged -- probably deliberately by the conquerors or newly converted Christian natives attempting to stamp out the ancient Druidic worship practices.

Stonehenge lay neglected and forgotten until around 1600 A.D. Then speculation about Stonehenge began to be heard, and legends about its origins and purpose started to flourish. It was not until 1901, however, that deliberate archaeological excavations and detached scientific study of the stone ruins began.

BATHROOMS ARE GETTING PRETTIER, MORE FUNCTIONAL

Gone is the cramped, strictly utilitarian room of yesterday! According to the Plumbing-Heating - Cooling Information Bureau, the typical bathroom installed 10 years ago had a white tub, lavatory stand and water closet in a 5x7 -foot space. Today's bathroom is more likely to be 7x8 or 7x10 feet. There's plenty of room for the things women are demanding -- twin-bowl vanity lavatories, bigger tubs, bidets and lots of storage. There's also more room to move around and make cleaning easier.

Manufacturers of bathroom equipment make their products available in a riot of colors and a variety of styles, so the homemaker can plan her bathrooms to fit the home's general decor. For this reason, many bathroom designers now refer to their equipment as "bathroom furniture."

If you're planning a new bathroom, it will pay you to visit a plumbing contractor's showroom -- not only to see what products are available but also to get information about quality. As in the case of everything else you buy, you can get products in a range of qualities. The wise home planner will shy away from the cheapies. Your bathroom equipment gets used more than almost everything else in your home, so it pays to buy the best. Good quality fixtures are more efficient, operate more quietly and are easiest to keep clean. The cost differential is modest, when you spread it out over the span of your installment plan.

You can get a quick rundown on what makes a quality fixture from a booklet titled "What You Should Know About Plumbing Fixtures for Your Home." It's available free from the Plumbing Fixture Mfrs. Assn., 1145 19th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

My husband was assigned to show several visitors, including an Englishman, around the base at Fort Monmouth, N.J. After the tour, they had a drink at the officers' club. They began discussing how certain accepted civilian moralities had to be put aside if they came into conflict with what they called "a soldier's duty." An American lieutenant used this analogy while speaking to the English visitor. "Suppose I told you," he said, "that a man rode a horse --not in the line of duty -- until the horse was lathered, exhausted and ready to drop?"

"I'd shoot the bounder," was the no-nonsense reply from the Englishman.

"Now, then," said the lieutenant, "suppose I told you that that man was Paul Revere?"

"I'd still shoot the bounder," declared the Englishman.

Traffic Toll up To 601

CHICAGO (AP)— Traffic accidents across the nation during the Memorial Day holiday weekend took a record toll of 601 lives, compared with 560 in the nonholiday period of similar length two weeks ago.

The count for the four-day holiday that ended at midnight Tuesday was the highest ever for a 102-hour Memorial Day period, but was well below pre-holiday estimates.

The total compared with the previous high for the holiday-542 during a three-day weekend in 1966. In the most recent four-day observance of Memorial Day, in 1963, traffic fatalities totaled 525.

The National Safety Council last week had estimated the final toll this year would range from 650 to 750.

Traffic fatalities hit record high totals last year on Memorial Day, Independence Day, Labor Day and Thanksgiving Day periods. However, totals fell short of record levels during Christmas and New Year celebrations. The all-time high death toll for any holiday period was 748, set during the four-day Thanksgiving period last year.

Memorial Service Held

More than 200 persons attended a Memorial Day service at 10 a.m. Tuesday at the Garden of Memories.

Flags of deceased veterans buried in the cemetery were displayed.

Msgr. Walter McGrane, pastor of St. Francis Xavier church, opened the program with an invocation.

Carol Clayton sang "America the Beautiful."

Then the Rev. Joseph Wagner, pastor of First Methodist Church, delivered the message.

Varying sentiments of sorrow, pride, remembrance and forgetting are felt today, he began.

Thousands across the land are taking part today in what has been termed "a great ritual of remembrance."

And in the midst of the celebration will be the grandeur and meaning of the American flag.

A little boy, caught up in the excitement and tenseness of the day, asked "What is the flag for?"

"Two Seabees stood outside an ancient temple and watched as an elderly man walked up to the temple, pulling a little cart. He stopped at the foot of the long

Shriver Asked to Investigate War On Poverty Impasse in Bootheel

BENTON - Robert M. Edwards, president of the Delta Area Economic Opportunity Corporation board of directors, has sent a telegram to Sargeant Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity at Washington, D.C., requesting an investigation of DAEOC problems.

The telegram was sent Monday night after Edwards learned of a press release of Don Thomason, OEO regional director at Kansas City. The release stated that DAEOC would not receive funds for the Head Start program because the DAEOC board had dismissed Lloyd Phillips as Head Start director.

Phillips and Bill Graves, both assistant directors of the DAEOC office at Portageville, were dismissed by the DAEOC board May 22 after the two had appealed a previous vote to dismiss them. Thomason had ordered the board to grant the two a hearing so that they could answer charges listing the reasons why they were being discharged.

The vote on the motion to put the two back to work was tied, 12-12, and failed to carry for lack of a majority. The regional office, however, has refused to honor the board's decision, charging that the board was unable to act as a comprehensive unit.

"The situation surrounding the dismissal of Graves and Phillips has reached a stalemate," Thomasons news release stated.

"This stalemate has resulted from the 12-12 vote. Because it has been impossible for this agency to resolve this matter wherein some individual would have been selected to serve as director of the summer Head Start program, only two alternatives are available:

"(1) Some other agency must be located which would be willing to accept the responsibility for administering the summer Head Start program. The agency must be willing to expand this responsibility and accept other Office of Economic Opportunity programs, or

"(2) There will be no summer Head Start program for the six-county area of Stoddard, Scott, Dunklin, Pemiscot, New Madrid and Mississippi Counties served by DAEOC.

"It is my sincere hope that some organization located in this particular area and which can qualify will be willing to accept the responsibility for this most important program and will make its availability known to this Regional office at 215 West Pershing Road, Kansas City, Missouri 64108."

Edwards said that although the release was sent to all area new media, no copy was sent to the DAEOC board or the DAEOC office at Portageville.

His telegram to Shriver requests that the action of the regional director's failure to fund the Head Start program be investigated by the Washington office.

In the telegram Edwards pointed out that Phillips and Graves had been dismissed by the board by a vote of 14-8 and that two requests for hearings by the two men were denied on 17-6 and 15-8 votes before Thomason ordered the meeting.

Thomason had notified the board that unless Phillips and Graves were given a hearing, the Head Start funds would be

$1 Million Cotton Loss

McClure Boy Dies In Crash

Corwin Hethering McClure, nine, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. McClure, 505 Park Street, died as the result of a headon collision Monday at 7:15 p.m. at the outskirts of Columbia, Ill.

He was a passenger in the car driven by his mother, Mrs. Della McClure, a sister, Carol and a brother, Stephen, and Mrs. Sarah Fuller and her two children. Mrs. McClure and the four children, were treated in a Belleville hospital.

The accident occurred at 6:45 p.m. at a bypass between Washington and Clark streets at Columbia, as the McClure car was traveling north on highway 3, when a car driven by Eleanor E. Leathen, Jennings, crossed over the center line and struck the McClure car.

Corwin McClure was born in Sikeston Sept. 29, 1957, and was a third grade pupil in the Lee Hunter school. He had the lead part in a play, "Snoopy Flies to Agbar," presented before the Southeast Missouri Teachers Association meeting at Cape Girardeau in March.

Surving besides his parents are the brother, and sister, his paternal grandparents, Dr. and Mrs. T.C. McClure, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., and his maternal grandparents, Judge and Mrs. Roland G. Busch, Cape Girardeau.

Private graveside rites were held Tuesday at 4 p.m. in the Garden of Memories cemetery, with the Rev. Joseph H. Wagner, First Methodist pastor, officiating, with the Welsh Funeral Home in charge.

McClure Damage to Bootheel Crop Exceeds 1966

By Don Roberts

NEW MADRID - A $1 million cotton crop loss has been estimated for the Bootheel by F. Reed Granger, state director of the Federal Crop Insurance Corp., of Sedalia.

An expected 1,200 policy holders will make claims for their cotton loss on 2,500 units (farms) by Thursday.

An additional 12 adjusters to the nine working in the area have been called to assist in appraising and inspecting the loss.

The seven-county area consists of New Madrid, Dunklin, Pemiscot, Stoddard, Mississippi, Scott and Butler counties.

Joe Bartolacci, district supervisor of Delta District 4 said 90 percent of the farmers have replanted their cotton twice, about 30 percent have planted three times and about 10 percent have planted only once.

In comparison to last year, Bartolacci said "The 1967 crop loss is greater than that of 1966. Last year about 60 percent of the cotton crop was lost, and this year it is still too early to tell but an estimated 90 percent crop loss will be made."

The main reasons for the loss were cool weather, excess moisture, flooding and conditions brought about by excessive moisture, Bartolacci said.

The average farmer will have about $35 an acre invested in his cotton crop at this time, Bartolacci noted, and Federal Crop Insurance Corp., is paying from $30 to $45 per acre depending on the type of plan the farmer has.

Thirty percent of the wheat in the Delta area was lost because of frost and excessive moisture, Granger said. The wheat in the Bootheel was damaged more than any other area in Missouri because the Bootheel crop was farther advanced than in other areas in the state.

The field office in New Madrid has been operating seven days a week, since May 19 and will continue to do so until the job is done, Bartolacci said. All claims are expected to be in by Thursday.

To qualify for Federal Crop Insurance, the farmer must go to a substitute crop or leave his land idle. If the farmer replants his cotton, he will receive no coverage.

The farmers must be patient to allow an adjustment to be made, and a release will be made as soon as possible, Bartolacci said.

Many farmers in the Bootheel feel that since the cotton was damged soybeans will be the big crop as it was last year. Most farmers will not plow up what's left of their cotton and replant soybeans as they did last year.

Soviet Ships Advance

CAIRO (AP) — Soviet warships began sailing through the Bosporus today, raising the threat of a naval confrontation with the British and Americans in the Middle East crisis, Turkish reports said.

Naval sources in Istanbul said the advance party consisted of a submarine repair ship and four armed escort vessels bound for the eastern Mediterranean.

The Turkish navy command said the Soviet government reported it will send 10 warships, in all, through Turkey's strait to the Mediterranean, where the powerful U.S. 6th Fleet and British ships are deployed.

One source said that even if these ships join a Soviet flotilla of about a dozen ships, the naval balance would remain strongly in favor of the United States. The Soviet flotilla, which has been shadowing the 6th Fleet, includes submarines, spy trawlers and destroyers.

In other developments:

Syria, whose charge that Israel planned an invasion touched off the current crisis, ignored the new Jordanian-Egyptian defense alliance and issued virulent propaganda attacks against King Hussein of Jordan.

Iraq announced that troops had left Baghdad, the capital, to join other units en route to Egypt to face an Israeli build-up on the border. Baghdad radio said other troops will leave soon to join other Iraqi soldiers in Syria.

Israel, already mobilized, announced the extension of the 47-hour work week to a possible maximum of 71 hours to help make up for a manpower shortage.

The Jordanian Parliament in Amman, the capital, adopted a resolution hailing the Egyptian-Jordanian defense pact as "the first step toward the liberation of Palestine and the regaining of the usurped land."

Telephone Prefixes Will Switch to Numerals

Telephone prefixes in Sikeston and Morehouse will switch from GRanite 1 to 471 and from NOrthfield 7 to 667 in December, John Donoho, Southwestern Bell Telephone Company manager, announced today. This involves no change in dialing procedures because the position of the numbers is identical to that of the letters.

The change is necessary because of the growth in the number of telephones. The use of all numerals increases telephone number possibilities by nearly 50 per cent over the combination of letters and numerals.

About three-fourths of the telephones in the United States have been converted to ANC.

Telephone directories listing the new numbers will be distributed when the changeover is made.

"All telephone users in Sikeston and Morehouse will be notified of the conversion to all number calling, and their new number, by letter," Donoho said. "Persons who plan to order stationery and other printed materials on which telephone numbers are carried should keep in mind that their number will change in December."

Federal Grant For Dexter School System

Traffic Toll up To 601

CHICAGO (AP)— Traffic accidents across the nation during the Memorial Day holiday weekend took a record toll of 601 lives, compared with 560 in the nonholiday period of similar length two weeks ago.

The count for the four-day holiday that ended at midnight Tuesday was the highest ever for a 102-hour Memorial Day period, but was well below pre-holiday estimates.

The total compared with the previous high for the holiday-542 during a three-day weekend in 1966. In the most recent four-day observance of Memorial Day, in 1963, traffic fatalities totaled 525.

The National Safety Council last week had estimated the final toll this year would range from 650 to 750.

Traffic fatalities hit record high totals last year on Memorial Day, Independence Day, Labor Day and Thanksgiving Day periods. However, totals fell short of record levels during Christmas and New Year celebrations. The all-time high death toll for any holiday period was 748, set during the four-day Thanksgiving period last year.

Memorial Service Held

More than 200 persons attended a Memorial Day service at 10 a.m. Tuesday at the Garden of Memories.

Flags of deceased veterans buried in the cemetery were displayed.

Msgr. Walter McGrane, pastor of St. Francis Xavier church, opened the program with an invocation.

Carol Clayton sang "America the Beautiful."

Then the Rev. Joseph Wagner, pastor of First Methodist Church, delivered the message.

Varying sentiments of sorrow, pride, remembrance and forgetting are felt today, he began.

Thousands across the land are taking part today in what has been termed "a great ritual of remembrance."

And in the midst of the celebration will be the grandeur and meaning of the American flag.

A little boy, caught up in the excitement and tenseness of the day, asked "What is the flag for?"

"Two Seabees stood outside an ancient temple and watched as an elderly man walked up to the temple, pulling a little cart. He stopped at the foot of the long

Shriver Asked to Investigate War On Poverty Impasse in Bootheel

BENTON - Robert M. Edwards, president of the Delta Area Economic Opportunity Corporation board of directors, has sent a telegram to Sargeant Shriver, director of the Office of Economic Opportunity at Washington, D.C., requesting an investigation of DAEOC problems.

The telegram was sent Monday night after Edwards learned of a press release of Don Thomason, OEO regional director at Kansas City. The release stated that DAEOC would not receive funds for the Head Start program because the DAEOC board had dismissed Lloyd Phillips as Head Start director.

Phillips and Bill Graves, both assistant directors of the DAEOC office at Portageville, were dismissed by the DAEOC board May 22 after the two had appealed a previous vote to dismiss them. Thomason had ordered the board to grant the two a hearing so that they could answer charges listing the reasons why they were being discharged.

The vote on the motion to put the two back to work was tied, 12-12, and failed to carry for lack of a majority. The regional office, however, has refused to honor the board's decision, charging that the board was unable to act as a comprehensive unit.

"The situation surrounding the dismissal of Graves and Phillips has reached a stalemate," Thomasons news release stated.

"This stalemate has resulted from the 12-12 vote. Because it has been impossible for this agency to resolve this matter wherein some individual would have been selected to serve as director of the summer Head Start program, only two alternatives are available;

"(1) Some other agency must be located which would be willing to accept the responsibility for administering the summer Head Start program. The agency must be willing to expand this responsibility and accept other Office of Economic Opportunity programs, or

"(2) There will be no summer Head Start program for the six-county area of Stoddard, Scott, Dunklin, Pemiscot, New Madrid and Mississippi Counties served by DAEOC.

"It is my sincere hope that some organization located in this particular area and which can qualify will be willing to accept the responsibility for this most important program and will make its availability known to this Regional office at 215 West Pershing Road, Kansas City, Missouri 64108."

Edwards said that although the release was sent to all area new media, no copy was sent to the DAEOC board or the DAEOC office at Portageville.

His telegram to Shriver requests that the action of the regional director's failure to fund the Head Start program be investigated by the Washington office.

In the telegram Edwards pointed out that Phillips and Graves had been dismissed by the board by a vote of 14-8 and that two requests for hearings by the two men were denied on 17-6 and 15-8 votes before Thomason ordered the meeting.

Thomason had notified the board that unless Phillips and Graves were given a hearing, the Head Start funds would be

McClure Boy Dies In Crash

Corwin Hethering McClure, nine, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. McClure, 505 Park Street, died as the result of a headon collision Monday at 7:15 p.m. at the outskirts of Columbia, Ill.

He was a passenger in the car driven by his mother, Mrs. Della McClure, a sister, Carol and a brother, Stephen, and Mrs. Sarah Fuller and her two children. Mrs. McClure and the four children, were treated in a Belleville hospital.

The accident occurred at 6:45 p.m. at a bypass between Washington and Clark streets at Columbia, as the McClure car was traveling north on highway 3, when a car driven by Eleanor E. Leathen, Jennings, crossed over the center line and struck the McClure car.

Corwin McClure was born in Sikeston Sept. 29, 1957, and was a third grade pupil in the Lee Hunter school. He had the lead part in a play, "Snoopy Flies to Agbar," presented before the Southeast Missouri Teachers Association meeting at Cape Girardeau in March.

Surving besides his parents are the brother, and sister, his paternal grandparents, Dr. and Mrs. T.C. McClure, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., and his maternal grandparents, Judge and Mrs. Roland G. Busch, Cape Girardeau.

Private graveside rites were held Tuesday at 4 p.m. in the Garden of Memories cemetery, with the Rev. Joseph H. Wagner, First Methodist pastor, officiating, with the Welsh Funeral Home in charge.

McClure Damage to Bootheel Crop Exceeds 1966

By Don Roberts

NEW MADRID - A $1 million cotton crop loss has been estimated for the Bootheel by F. Reed Granger, state director of the Federal Crop Insurance Corp., of Sedalia.

An expected 1,200 policy holders will make claims for their cotton loss on 2,500 units (farms) by Thursday.

An additional 12 adjusters to the nine working in the area have been called to assist in appraising and inspecting the loss.

The seven-county area consists of New Madrid, Dunklin, Pemiscot, Stoddard, Mississippi, Scott and Butler counties.

Joe Bartolacci, district supervisor of Delta District 4 said 90 percent of the farmers have replanted their cotton twice, about 30 percent have planted three times and about 10 percent have planted only once.

In comparison to last year, Bartolacci said "The 1967 crop loss is greater than that of 1966. Last year about 60 percent of the cotton crop was lost, and this year it is still too early to tell but an estimated 90 percent crop loss will be made."

The main reasons for the loss were cool weather, excess moisture, flooding and conditions brought about by excessive moisture, Bartolacci said.

The average farmer will have about $35 an acre invested in his cotton crop at this time, Bartolacci noted, and Federal Crop Insurance Corp., is paying from $30 to $45 per acre depending on the type of plan the farmer has.

Thirty percent of the wheat in the Delta area was lost because of frost and excessive moisture, Granger said. The wheat in the Bootheel was damaged more than any other area in Missouri because the Bootheel crop was farther advanced than in other areas in the state.

The field office in New Madrid has been operating seven days a week, since May 19 and will continue to do so until the job is done, Bartolacci said. All claims are expected to be in by Thursday.

To qualify for Federal Crop Insurance, the farmer must go to a substitute crop or leave his land idle. If the farmer replants his cotton, he will receive no coverage.

The farmers must be patient to allow an adjustment to be made, and a release will be made as soon as possible, Bartolacci said.

Many farmers in the Bootheel feel that since the cotton was damged soybeans will be the big crop as it was last year. Most farmers will not plow up what's left of their cotton and replant soybeans as they did last year.

Soviet Ships Advance

CAIRO (AP) — Soviet warships began sailing through the Bosporus today, raising the threat of a naval confrontation with the British and Americans in the Middle East crisis, Turkish reports said.

Naval sources in Istanbui said the advance party consisted of a submarine repair ship and four armed escort vessels bound for the eastern Mediterranean.

The Turkish navy command said the Soviet government reported it will send 10 warships, in all, through Turkey's strait to the Mediterranean, where the powerful U.S. 6th Fleet and British ships are deployed.

One source said that even if these ships join a Soviet flotilla of about a dozen ships, the naval balance would remain strongly in favor of the United States. The Soviet flotilla, which has been shadowing the 6th Fleet, includes submarines, spy trawlers and destroyers.

In other developments:

Syria, whose charge that Israel planned an invasion touched off the current crisis, ignored the new Jordanian-Egyptian defense alliance and issued virulent propaganda attacks against King Hussein of Jordan.

Iraq announced that troops had left Baghdad, the capital, to join other units en route to Egypt to face an Israeli build-up on the border. Baghdad radio said other troops will leave soon to join other Iraqi soldiers in Syria.

Israel, already mobilized, announced the extension of the 47-hour work week to a possible maximum of 71 hours to help make up for a manpower shortage.

The Jordanian Parliament in Amman, the capital, adopted a resolution hailing the Egyptian-Jordanian defense pact as "the first step toward the liberation of Palestine and the regaining of the usurped land."

HANDS OFF, MR. THOMASON

Administrative chaos in the "war on poverty" has brought the program to a near standstill in southeast Missouri, after what was at one time a promising start.

This chaos has plagued the Delta Area Economic Opportunity Corporation (DAEOC) since its very inception, but responsibility for the problem can ultimately be laid at the door of the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) top brass in Washington and Kansas City.

A $500,000 Head Start Program for this summer is particularly confused, but the entire anti-poverty structure so laboriously erected over the past two years is also in serious trouble.

We refer to a statement from the office of OEO Regional Director Don Thomason, printed in a Kennett newspaper Thursday, that "if the internal problems of DAEOC were not resolved by May 15 (later changed to 19), the OEO would make direct contact with local schools to give them Head Start funds, by-passing DAEOC completely.

"Internal problems" is Thomason's euphemism for the DAEOC board's assertion of its right to hire and fire employees without veto from the regional office in Kansas City.

Mr. Thomason's decision to let school boards deal directly with OEO in setting up Head Start projects is somewhat amusing, because it overturns a basic OEO policy of the past two years. It is always amusing to watch these well-paid bureaucrats reversing their own decisions.

In the spring of 1965, Charleston and several other school districts dealt directly with OEO in Washington and set up Head Start programs. The summer sessions were hailed as a great success in getting "disadvantaged" children ready for school.

However, the OEO was not satisfied that school boards were sufficiently representative of low-income people. Therefore, since the fall of 1965, all war on poverty projects in southeast Missouri, including Head Start, have been sent to the OEO through a regional agency - the DAEOC board - which presumably is more representative of the poor than are regularly-elected local government agencies.

The DAEOC board has been organized, reorganized, and re-reorganized on orders from Washington and Kansas City, to get the proper "balance" of Negro and white, and of low and high income board members. Elections have been held time and again to comply with the ever-changing guidelines issued in Kansas City and Washington. Presumably the final result of all this reorganization would be a board that could speak with some authority on the conduct of the war on poverty in southeast Missouri.

But this year the board, which was set up in accordance with OEO directives, decided to fire two of its employees - one of whom is the "fair-haired boy" of the Dunklin County economic opportunity establishment. (Mr. Thomason is a native of Dunklin County.)

Thomason then ordered the DAEOC board to put the two men back on the payroll and give them another hearing. The board met, and reaffirmed its determination to dismiss the two employees. A third hearing is scheduled for next Monday.

So the issue is drawn between DAEOC and Thomason, and it involves nothing less than two basic policies of the Office of Economic Opportunity:

1. Whether it is wise to structure the war on poverty on a multi-county basis; and

2. Whether the popularly elected DAEOC board is to control its own employees and the war on poverty in southeast Missouri, or is to be merely a rubber stamp for, and political tool of, Don Thomason.

We have always argued that single county boards, if left in control of their own projects, would have been able to run the war on poverty within their borders much more efficiently and with more effective control than has the loose confederation headquartered in Portageville.

If Thomason is determined to break up DAEOC, then we say more power to him. Return control of the economic opportunity program to the county boards, where inter-county politics will not wreck it.

However, if it is still OEO's administrative policy to force counties into a consolidated agency like DAEOC in order to get anti-poverty funds, then it behooves Thomason and his minions to stay out of what is essentially an internal matter - the selection of their employees by the directors of a corporation chartered under the laws of Missouri.

The show-me spirit of meet me in St. Louis is being matched with Paris in the spring this May.

A replica of "The Spirit of St. Louis," the monoplane in which Charles Lindbergh became the first to fly across the Atlantic alone, is on display at the 27th French International Air Show.

The plane provides the theme for the American exhibit. It is suspended from a reproduction of the Gateway Arch, hopefully without the chemical smog or the construction difficulties that almost have submerged the real one in Missouri's largest city.

The plane was flown across the Atlantic in a cargo plane. A civilian pilot flew it down the Seine, circled the Eiffel tower and landed at Le Bouget, the airfield whose fame is synonymous with Lindbergh.

The faded original, now hanging in the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, cost $10,500. The copy, used in a moving picture of the Lindbergh exploit, cost $50,000.

The memory of Lindy at LeBouget should put down the competitive challenge of the Russians in the show.

When he landed there 40 years ago on May 21, 1927 his shyness enchanted the French.

The slender Lindbergh was cast in a mold made for heroism but not for public acclaim. His anti-public attitude is not cute in a man, who has otherwise matured.

There have been clouds in the Lindbergh years - the horror of the kidnap-murder of an infant son, the isolationism and open anti-Semitism on the threshhold of World War II. He has matched this record with dedicated if anonymous service to his country in World War II and the Korean conflict.

He was last reported in Saigon.

It is just as well for this country's world image that the aging recluse stayed away from the French air show. It is better to remember him as he was.

The same excuse was made for a state lottery in New York, where $1 tickets go on sale on or shortly after Thursday, June 1. The first drawing for prizes is scheduled for July 20.

A player's chances of winning - up to $100,000 with an annual special bonus of $250,000 - are supposed to be 1 in 4,167. These odds are unacceptable to professional gamblers, but they are expected to be attractive to the poor. The state is now predicting annual gross revenue of $360 million, of which $198 million would go to schools. What the N.Y. Times (April 21, 1967) calls an "insupportable" 15 per cent of the take will go for administration.

One argument for the lottery was that the poor would switch from playing the illegal numbers game to the state-sanctioned wheel. The reverse may prove to be true. Individuals habituated to the lottery may turn to the more convenient daily numbers runner. New Hampshire's lottery has proved nowhere nearly so productive as expected.

James Samuel Ezell, a historian of the lottery in America, observed in 1960: "If history teaches anything, a study of the over 1,300 legal lotteries in the United States proves these things: "They cost more than they brought in if their total impact on society is reckoned; and 160 years' experience indicates clearly that the most careful supervision cannot eradicate the inevitable abuse in a system particularly susceptible to fraud."

A PES BRUSH UP ON ART

At long last an effort is to be made to answer one of the burning questions of our time:

Is modern art really art or can any ape do it?

South African artist Walter Battiss is going to experiment with chimpanzees at the Pretoria Zoo in an attempt to find a basis for the evaluation of modern art, which many people suspect can be produced just as well by chimps as by humans.

Battiss doesn't believe the simians are capable of being true artists. What they do with brush and paint is just physical movement, he thinks. What he hopes to learn is how many human artists are in the same league.

"This ape art may help us to find out how much of modern art is purely mechanical movement without any emotion," he says.

It seems only fair that monkeys should help people with this art problem since some artists have been making monkeys out of people for years.

. . .AND THE BEARD IS STILL WINNER

The well - known acceleration effect of technology isn't just confined to transportation or communications or war - making. It's evident in everyday human activities, too. Like shaving.

Primitive man, we can only guess, whacked off his whiskers with a flint ax. A few hundred thousand years later, some genius discovered how to make metal axes and more than one revolution was begun.

When the first actual razor was made is not known, but bronze razors still retaining a fair degree of keenness have been found in ancient Egyptian tombs.

A few thousand more years passed before the straight - edge, concave razor, still used by barbers, brought the first change in form since the days of the pharaohs. But then technology really set in.

In 1895 came the original safety razor with inexpensive, thin, replaceable blades. The first one - piece double-edge razor was introduced in 1938 and was soon followed by the single - edge injector razor. In the meantime, the first electric whisker whacker had been patented in 1928.

Adjustable - blade razors appeared in 1958. Then in 1960, the discovery of a method of chemically treating blade edges ushered in a new era. Only a couple of years later, marketing of a stainless steel blade started a new revolution.

The latest entry in the battle of the beard features a continuous band of six plastic - coated shaving edges housed in a replaceable cartridge.

But whiskers keep growing and the battle goes on. It's estimated that the average man spends about 3,350 hours - or 139 days - out of his lifetime just shaving.

H.L. Hunt Says

VALUE OF ELECTORAL COLLEGE

The Electoral College system of choosing the President and Vice President met a critical need in the establishment of our Republic. Time has brought an awareness that the system needs of a Constitutional Amendment providing for direct voting for the nation's two top executives.

Far superior to this proposal is the Congressional District Plan, with every voter casting his ballot for one elector from his district and two electors from the state at large. This is a reform that would retain the Electoral College system and no doubt would attract favorable attention to our Republic throughout the world.

On the other hand, abolition of the Electoral College by adoption of the direct vote for President and Vice President would have little if any favorable impact for our nation. Totalitarian dictators extend to their populace the privilege of going to the polls and casting votes for their dictator and his henchmen.

They could laugh up their sleeves if they found the claimants of freedom offering their populace a chance to cast a direct vote. They could rightly ask what had become of our cherished governmental system of providing checks and balances and protection for our minorities instead of dictatorship.

Retention with reform of our Electoral College is imperative if we are to preserve our Republic. The District Plan of reform is the constructive way to accomplish this. A resolution calling for a Constitutional Amendment to put the plan into effect is before Congress now.

NEW YORK (AP) — Remarks that hospital patients get tired of hearing — and overhearing:

"Well, well, well. And how do we feel this morning?"

"You're being put on an 800-calorie-a-day diet. While you're here you might as well take off a few pounds."

"If he tries to pinch me just one more time, you'll have to assign him another nurse."

"Naughty, naughty boy. If you don't eat all your breakfast prunes, sir, I'll just have to bring them back to you again for lunch."

"I don't know who brought that bottle to you, sir, but I'll have to take it from you. The only beverage you're allowed is lukewarm water. Shall I bring you a fresh glass? You're allowed as much as you want."

"Wake up, wake up! It's 6 o'clock."

"This is the day the doctor takes the bandage off. Some of the patients really scream when that happens, but in your case I don't think it will hurt that bad."

"The doc won't let you smoke yet, eh, Jim? Well, as a visitor, I guess that rule doesn't apply to me. You don't mind if I light up a cigar, do you?"

"I don't know why you complain so much about the bedpan, Mr. Cadwallader. There's nothing to it, once you get the hang of it, and after all you can't expect to be quite as comfortable in a hospital as you are in your own home."

"Remember, when we go into his room, tell him he looks swell -- no matter how you really think he looks."

"After all, I am merely your nurse — not your wife or your mother."

"They may tell you you'll feel as good as new in a couple more weeks, but I had a pal who had his gallbladder out, and he didn't get his golf game back to normal for a full year.

"Just as a friendly tip, Jim, I'd get back on the job as soon as I could if I were you. That new guy they got doing your work is going at it like a house afire."

"Since this is only a semiprivate room, sir, I'm afraid we'll have to move another patient in. But don't worry, he won't be any trouble to you. He's in a coma."

"Ah, so you're leaving us, Mr. Cadwallader. Your bill for the 14 days, counting medicine and incidentals, will be $976.50. Help, help! Quick, someone. Mr. Cadwallader has fainted. Better take him up and put him back in bed again."

Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON -- Last year in Tel Aviv I interviewed Maj. Gen. Isaac Rabin, the Israeli Army Chief of Staff, regarding the defense of his country in case of such a crisis as has developed today.

He pointed to a map of the Near East. It was a graphic map, showing his Little Country, about the size of Massachusetts, with a 610-mile border and a population of 2,500,000 surrounded by 50 million Arabs. The map was so jagged that at one point a corridor of Jordanian-Arab land protruded like an arrow toward Haifa. And the distance between that arrow and the Mediterranean Sea was only seven miles. Thus, the width of Israel at one point is about equivalent to the length of Manhattan.

Gen. Rabin, nevertheless, seemed confident of his ability to defend his country.

"We depend for our defense first on being alert; second, on our ability to buy arms from the west to counterbalance Russian arms in Arab hands; third, on our reserves.

"We cannot afford a huge standing army, so we depend on a small, well trained, well armed reserve, ready to be called up within 48 hours. Every young man and woman in Israel must serve two years and then spend one month each year in military training.

"We have to be on the alert with modern weapons Tel Aviv is only nine minutes from Cairo by fast jet bomber, and four minutes from Jordan."

There is no question about the fact that the Arab leaders have entertained a healthy respect for the Israeli Army. Traveling through Lebanon, Syria, and Jordan in 1957, one year after the Israeli advance to the Suez Canal, I found Arab leaders terrified of the Israelis. The last thing they wanted was another showdown with fast-moving Israeli tanks and armored cars.

SURPRISE IS ALL IMPORTANT

But that was 10 years ago, and since then it has been quite evident that at least two of the Arab states, Egypt and Syria, have been systematically building up for a showdown.

Thus, the important advantage which Gen. Rabin emphasized -- surprise -- is now gone. And this is why Israeli leaders have been restless over the delay caused by U Thant's pilgrimage to Cairo, the United Nations debate, and the stern advice of London and Washington not to precipitate hostilities.

During this intervening time, a huge Egyptian army is reported concentrating in the Sinai Peninsula between Israel and the Red Sea. Thus it would be difficult, if not impossible, for Israel to repeat what Gen. Moshe Dayan did in 1956 when he used old geological trails through the desert to get behind the Egyptian army and seize the Suez Canal.

What adds to Israeli pessimism is the fact that the Arab states have been embarked on a long and systematic arms buildup, thanks to help from Moscow, in preparation for a final attempt to carry out the Arab boast of pushing Israel into the sea.

When I was in the Near East a year ago, I obtained confidential figures on Arab strength. The situation has not changed materially since then. Here is the line-up of military might in the Near East:

TANKS - The Soviet has sent 2,500 tanks to the Arab states, of which 500 are T-54's, just as powerful as the American M-60's, and considerably more powerful than the American M-48.

Against this, Israel has about 600 tanks, chiefly M-4 Shermans, some centurions, and a few M-48's. In the past, the Israeli army has been able to outmaneuver and outgun its Arab opponents. However, the inescapable fact is that Isreael is outnumbered in tanks about four to one.

AIR POWER -- The Soviet has sent about 150 bombers to the Arab states, chiefly Ilyushin 28's, of which 120 are flown by Egyptians since Israel is a smaller country, no bigger than Massachusetts, with long borders completely surrounded by Arab neighbors, this is considered ample force to bomb any and every Israeli city -- if war comes.

In addition, the Arab states are well equipped with the latest Soviet fighter planes, MIG-19's, and MIG-21's. The total Egyptian air strength is estimated at 500 planes, including 52 MIG-21's, 80 MIG-19's, 60 transport planes, and 40 helicopters.

Israel has about 450 aircraft, including 75 mirage fighters equipped with Matra air - to air missiles, considered the latest thing in French fighters. It also has 55 Ouragon fighter-bombers, one squadron of transport planes supplied by the United States, one squadron of helicopters and 60 magister jet trainers.

MISSILES -- Russia has now delivered to Egypt 14 fast patrol boats of the Komar class plus four of the OSA class, each carrying missiles somewhat on the order of our polaris set - up except that they are not nuclear. They have a range of 20 miles, and since Israel is long and narrow, with depth in one place of only seven miles, these patrol boats could do tremendous damage in case of war.

Reporting from Israel last year, I wrote:

"While the world has been worrying about the war in Vietnam and Kashmir, a less-publicized but long - festering sore is reaching the danger point at the crossroads of Asia, Africa and Europe.

"On the borders of Israel and the Arab states, tensions are growing, troops are maneuvering, shots ring out every night."

HANDS OFF, MR. THOMASON

Administrative chaos in the "war on poverty" has brought the program to a near standstill in southeast Missouri, after what was at one time a promising start.

This chaos has plagued the Delta Area Economic Opportunity Corporation (DAEOC) since its very inception, but responsibility for the problem can ultimately be laid at the door of the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) top brass in Washington and Kansas City.

A $500,000 Head Start Program for this summer is particularly confused, but the entire anti-poverty structure so laboriously erected over the past two years is also in serious trouble.

We refer to a statement from the office of OEO Regional Director Don Thomason, printed in a Kennett newspaper Thursday, that "if the internal problems of DAEOC were not resolved by May 15 (later changed to 19), the OEO would make direct contact with local schools to give them Head Start funds, by-passing DAEOC completely.

"Internal problems" is Thomason's euphemism for the DAEOC board's assertion of its right to hire and fire employees without veto from the regional office in Kansas City.

Mr. Thomason's decision to let school boards deal directly with OEO in setting up Head Start projects is somewhat amusing, because it overturns a basic OEO policy of the past two years. It is always amusing to watch these well-paid bureaucrats reversing their own decisions.

In the spring of 1965, Charleston and several other school districts dealt directly with OEO in Washington and set up Head Start programs. The summer sessions were hailed as a great success in getting "disadvantaged" children ready for school.

However, the OEO was not satisfied that school boards were sufficiently representative of low-income people. Therefore, since the fall of 1965, all war on poverty projects in southeast Missouri, including Head Start, have been sent to the OEO through a regional agency - the DAEOC board - which presumably is more representative of the poor than are regularly-elected local government agencies.

The DAEOC board has been organized, reorganized, and re-reorganized on orders from Washington and Kansas City, to get the proper "balance" of Negro and white, and of low and high income board members. Elections have been held time and again to comply with the ever-changing guidelines issued in Kansas City and Washington. Presumably the final result of all this reorganization would be a board that could speak with some authority on the conduct of the war on poverty in southeast Missouri.

But this year the board, which was set up in accordance with OEO directives, decided to fire two of its employees - one of whom is the "fair-haired boy" of the Dunklin County economic opportunity establishment. (Mr. Thomason is a native of Dunklin County.)

Thomason then ordered the DAEOC board to put the two men back on the payroll and give them another hearing. The board met, and reaffirmed its determination to dismiss the two employees. A third hearing is scheduled for next Monday.

So the issue is drawn between DAEOC and Thomason, and it involves nothing less than two basic policies of the Office of Economic Opportunity:

1. Whether it is wise to structure the war on poverty on a multi-county basis; and

2. Whether the popularly elected DAEOC board is to control its own employees and the war on poverty in southeast Missouri, or is to be merely a rubber stamp for, and political tool of, Don Thomason.

We have always argued that single county boards, if left in control of their own projects, would have been able to run the war on poverty within their borders much more efficiently and with more effective control than has the loose confederation headquartered in Portageville.

If Thomason is determined to break up DAEOC, then we say more power to him. Return control of the economic opportunity program to the county boards, where inter-county politics will not wreck it.

However, if it is still OEO's administrative policy to force counties into a consolidated agency like DAEOC in order to get anti-poverty funds, then it behooves Thomason and his minions to stay out of what is essentially an internal matter - the selection of their employees by the directors of a corporation chartered under the laws of Missouri.

The show-me spirit of meet me in St. Louis is being matched with Paris in the spring this May.

A replica of "The Spirit of St. Louis," the monoplane in which Charles Lindbergh became the first to fly across the Atlantic alone, is on display at the 27th French International Air Show.

The plane provides the theme for the American exhibit. It is suspended from a reproduction of the Gateway Arch, hopefully without the chemical smog or the construction difficulties that almost have submerged the real one in Missouri's largest city.

The plane was flown across the Atlantic in a cargo plane. A civilian pilot flew it down the Seine, circled the Eiffel tower and landed at Le Bouget, the airfield whose fame is synonymous with Lindbergh.

The faded original, now hanging in the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, cost $10,500. The copy, used in a moving picture of the Lindbergh exploit, cost $50,000.

The memory of Lindy at LeBouget should put down the competitive challenge of the Russians in the show.

When he landed there 40 years ago on May 21, 1927 his shyness enchanted the French.

The slender Lindbergh was cast in a mold made for heroism but not for public acclaim. His anti-public attitude is not cute in a man, who has otherwise matured.

There have been clouds in the Lindbergh years - the horror of the kidnap-murder of an infant son, the isolationism and open anti-Semitism on the threshhold of World War II. He has matched this record with dedicated if anonymous service to his country in World War II and the Korean conflict.

He was last reported in Saigon.

It is just as well for this country's world image that the aging recluse stayed away from the French air show. It is better to remember him as he was.

GAMBLING FOR GOOD AND EVIL

The name of the game is education. The New Hampshire state lottery, the first in modern times, was sold in the name of much needed aid for public schools. The same excuse was made for a state lottery in New York, where $1 tickets go on sale on or shortly after Thursday, June 1. The first drawing for prizes is scheduled for July 20.

A player's chances of winning - up to $100,000 with an annual special bonus of $250,000 - are supposed to be 1 in 4,167. These odds are unacceptable to professional gamblers, but they are expected to be attractive to the poor. The state is now predicting annual gross revenue of $360 million, of which $198 million would go to schools. What the N.Y. Times (April 21, 1967) calls an "insupportable" 15 per cent of the take will go for administration.

One argument for the lottery was that the poor would switch from playing the illegal numbers game to the state-sanctioned wheel. The reverse may prove to be true. Individuals habituated to the lottery may turn to the more convenient daily numbers runner. New Hampshire's lottery has proved nowhere nearly so productive as expected.

James Samuel Ezell, a historian of the lottery in America, observed in 1960: "If history teaches anything, a study of the over 1,300 legal lotteries in the United States proves these things: "They cost more than they brought in if their total impact on society is reckoned; and 160 years' experience indicates clearly that the most careful supervision cannot eradicate the inevitable abuse in a system particularly susceptible to fraud."

If the copyright laws permitted, I would list phrases from popular love ballads, especially those that tell of broken hearts, rejected love, undying hate, and wishful thinking.

To a septuagenarian it seems incredible that anyone should care to own a library of such words, but the radio stations play them all day and all night.

A reader calls our attention to this thought, with the suggestion that he would like to see it developed: 'If a man would simply do the things which he knows he ought to do, and eliminate doing the things which he knows he ought not to do, he would double and treble his efficiency, his work would improve right along and his final success would be multiplied many times over.'

E. W. Howe, of Atchison, Kan., wrote a book with the title, 'Success Easier Than Failure.' Howe was the publisher of a successful small town newspaper. After retirement he devoted his talent to the writing of common sense, in a fresh and striking style.

He contends, in his book, that the rules for a comfortable, happy and successful life are simple and well known, consisting merely of industry, temperance and fairness.

'How promptly I have been punished for intemperance, laziness, unfairness!' he exclaims. 'The devil has never once forgiven me. But I have been benefited with equal certainty when I have accepted the simple, sensible, just rules my neighbors have taught me.'

APES BRUSH UP ON ART

At long last an effort is to be made to answer one of the burning questions of our time:

Is modern art really art or can any ape do it?

South African artist Walter Battiss is going to experiment with chimpanzees at the Pretoria Zoo in an attempt to find a basis for the evaluation of modern art, which many people suspect can be produced just as well by chimps as by humans.

Battiss doesn't believe the simians are capable of being true artists. What they do with brush and paint is just physical movement, he thinks. What he hopes to learn is how many human artists are in the same league.

"This ape art may help us to find out how much of modern art is purely mechanical movement without any emotion," he says.

It seems only fair that monkeys should help people with this art problem since some artists have been making monkeys out of people for years.

THREE KINDS OF BONES

Duffie Daugherty, coach at Michigan State, describes the qualities he looks for in his athletes at the university. "Of course, we like them big," he said, "but we'll settle for players with 3 kinds of bones -- a funny bone, a wishbone and a backbone. The funnybone is to enjoy a laugh, even at one's own expense. The wishbone is to think big, set one's goals high and to have dreams and ambitions. The back bone - well, that's so a boy will have the gumption to get up and work and make all those dreams come true."

. . .AND THE BEARD IS STILL WINNER

The well - known acceleration effect of technology isn't just confined to transportation or communications or war - making. It's evident in everyday human activities, too. Like shaving.

Primitive man, we can only guess, whacked off his whiskers with a flint ax. A few hundred thousand years later, some genius discovered how to make metal axes and more than one revolution was begun.

When the first actual razor was made is not known, but bronze razors still retaining a fair degree of keenness have been found in ancient Egyptian tombs.

A few thousand more years passed before the straight - edge, concave razor, still used by barbers, brought the first change in form since the days of the pharaohs. But then technology really set in.

In 1895 came the original safety razor with inexpensive, thin, replaceable blades. The first one - piece double-edge razor was introduced in 1938 and was soon followed by the single - edge injector razor. In the meantime, the first electric whisker whacker had been patented in 1928.

Adjustable - blade razors appeared in 1958. Then in 1960, the discovery of a method of chemically treating blade edges ushered in a new era. Only a couple of years later, marketing of a stainless steel blade started a new revolution.

The latest entry in the battle of the beard features a continuous band of six plastic - coated shaving edges housed in a replaceable cartridge.

But whiskers keep growing and the battle goes on. It's estimated that the average man spends about 3,350 hours - or 139 days - out of his lifetime just shaving.

The Indian regarded her gravely and at length replied, "You see cow?"

"Yes, I see cow . . . you don't mean?"

"Yes," replied the brave, "me make love to cow."

"Also," went on the brave, "you see horse?"

"Yes," replied the spinster -- horrified. "I see the horse. . ."

"Oh, dear!" cried the distraught old maid.

"No," grunted the Indian sadly, "no make love to deer . . .run too fast."

H.L. Hunt Says

VALUE OF ELECTORAL COLLEGE

The Electoral College system of choosing the President and Vice President met a critical need in the establishment of our Republic. Time has brought an awareness that the system needs of a Constitutional Amendment providing for direct voting for the nation's two top executives.

Far superior to this proposal is the Congressional District Plan, with every voter casting his ballot for one elector from his district and two electors from the state at large. This is a reform that would retain the Electoral College system and no doubt would attract favorable attention to our Republic throughout the world.

On the other hand, abolition of the Electoral College by adoption of the direct vote for President and Vice President would have little if any favorable impact for our nation. Totalitarian dictators extend to their populace the privilege of going to the polls and casting votes for their dictator and his henchmen.

They could laugh up their sleeves if they found the claimants of freedom offering their populace a chance to cast a direct vote. They could rightly ask what had become of our cherished governmental system of providing checks and balances and protection for our minorities instead of dictatorship.

Retention with reform of our Electoral College is imperative if we are to preserve our Republic. The District Plan of reform is the constructive way to accomplish this. A resolution calling for a Constitutional Amendment to put the plan into effect is before Congress now.

NEW YORK (AP) — Remarks that hospital patients get tired of hearing — and overhearing:

"Well, well, well. And how do we feel this morning?"

"You're being put on an 800-calorie-a-day diet. While you're here you might as well take off a few pounds."

"If he tries to pinch me just one more time, you'll have to assign him another nurse."

"Naughty, naughty boy. If you don't eat all your breakfast prunes, sir, I'll just have to bring them back to you again for lunch."

"I don't know who brought that bottle to you, sir, but I'll have to take it from you. The only beverage you're allowed is lukewarm water. Shall I bring you a fresh glass? You're allowed as much as you want."

"Wake up, wake up! It's 6 o'clock."

"This is the day the doctor takes the bandage off. Some of the patients really scream when that happens, but in your case I don't think it will hurt that bad."

"The doc won't let you smoke yet, eh, Jim? Well, as a visitor, I guess that rule doesn't apply to me. You don't mind if I light up a cigar, do you?"

"I don't know why you complain so much about the bedpan, Mr. Cadwallader. There's nothing to it, once you get the hang of it, and after all you can't expect to be quite as comfortable in a hospital as you are in your own home."

"Remember, when we go into his room, tell him he looks swell -- no matter how you really think he looks."

"After all, I am merely your nurse — not your wife or your mother."

"They may tell you you'll feel as good as new in a couple more weeks, but I had a pal who had his gallbladder out, and he didn't get his golf game back to normal for a full year.

"Just as a friendly tip, Jim, I'd get back on the job as soon as I could if I were you. That new guy they got doing your work is going at it like a house afire."

"Since this is only a semiprivate room, sir, I'm afraid we'll have to move another patient in. But don't worry, he won't be any trouble to you. He's in a coma."

"Ah, so you're leaving us, Mr. Cadwallader. Your bill for the 14 days, counting medicine and incidentals, will be $976.50. Help, help! Quick, someone. Mr. Cadwallader has fainted. Better take him up and put him back in bed again."

Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

WASHINGTON -- Last year in Tel Aviv I interviewed Maj. Gen. Isaac Rabin, the Israeli Army Chief of Staff, regarding the defense of his country in case of such a crisis as has developed today.

He pointed to a map of the Near East. It was a graphic map, showing his Little Country, about the size of Massachusetts, with a 610-mile border and a population of 2,500,000 surrounded by 50 million Arabs. The map was so jagged that at one point a corridor of Jordanian-Arab land protruded like an arrow toward Haifa. And the distance between that arrow and the Mediterranean Sea was only seven miles. Thus, the width of Israel at one point is about equivalent to the length of Manhattan.

Gen. Rabin, nevertheless, seemed confident of his ability to defend his country.

"We depend for our defense first on being alert; second, on our ability to buy arms from the west to counterbalance Russian arms in Arab hands; third, on our reserves.

"We cannot afford a huge standing army, so we depend on a small, well trained, well armed reserve, ready to be called up within 48 hours. Every young man and woman in Israel must serve two years and then spend one month each year in military training.

"We have to be on the alert with modern weapons Tel Aviv is only nine minutes from Cairo by fast jet bomber, and four minutes from Jordan."

There is no question about the fact that the Arab leaders have entertained a healthy respect for the Israeli Army. Traveling through Lebanon, Syria, and Jordan in 1957, one year after the Israeli advance to the Suez Canal, I found Arab leaders terrified of the Israelis. The last thing they wanted was another showdown with fast-moving Israeli tanks and armored cars.

SURPRISE IS ALL IMPORTANT

But that was 10 years ago, and since then it has been quite evident that at least two of the Arab states, Egypt and Syria, have been systematically building up for a showdown.

Thus, the important advantage which Gen. Rabin emphasized -- surprise -- is now gone. And this is why Israeli leaders have been restless over the delay caused by U Thant's pilgrimage to Cairo, the United Nations debate, and the stern advice of London and Washington not to precipitate hostilities.

During this intervening time, a huge Egyptian army is reported concentrating in the Sinai Peninsula between Israel and the Red Sea. Thus it would be difficult, if not impossible, for Israel to repeat what Gen. Moshe Dayan did in 1956 when he used old geological trails through the desert to get behind the Egyptian army and seize the Suez Canal.

What adds to Israeli pessimism is the fact that the Arab states have been embarked on a long and systematic arms buildup, thanks to help from Moscow, in preparation for a final attempt to carry out the Arab boast of pushing Israel into the sea.

When I was in the Near East a year ago, I obtained confidential figures on Arab strength. The situation has not changed materially since then. Here is the line-up of military might in the Near East:

TANKS - The Soviet has sent 2,500 tanks to the Arab states, of which 500 are T-54's, just as powerful as the American M-60's, and considerably more powerful than the American M-48.

Against this, Israel has about 600 tanks, chiefly M-4 Shermans, some centurions, and a few M-48's. In the past, the Israeli army has been able to outmaneuver and outgun its Arab opponents. However, the inescapable fact is that Isreael is outnumbered in tanks about four to one.

AIR POWER -- The Soviet has sent about 150 bombers to the Arab states, chiefly Illyushin 28's, of which 120 are flown by Egyptians since Israel is a smaller country, no bigger than Massachusetts, with long borders completely surrounded by Arab neighbors, this is considered ample force to bomb any and every Israeli city -- if war comes.

In addition, the Arab states are well equipped with the latest Soviet fighter planes, MIG-19's, and MIG-21's. The total Egyptian air strength is estimated at 500 planes, including 52 MIG-21's, 80 MIG-19's, 60 transport planes, and 40 helicopters.

Israel has about 450 aircraft, including 75 mirage fighters equipped with Matra air - to air missiles, considered the latest thing in French fighters. It also has 55 Ouragon fighter-bombers, one squadron of transport planes supplied by the United States, one squadron of helicopters and 60 magister jet trainers.

MISSILES -- Russia has now delivered to Egypt 14 fast patrol boats of the Komar class plus four of the OSA class, each carrying missiles somewhat on the order of our polaris set - up except that they are not nuclear. They have a range of 20 miles, and since Israel is long and narrow, with depth in one place of only seven miles, these patrol boats could do tremendous damage in case of war.

Reporting from Israel last year, I wrote:

"While the world has been worrying about the war in Vietnam and Kashmir, a less-publicized but long - festering sore is reaching the danger point at the crossroads of Asia, Africa and Europe.

"On the borders of Israel and the Arab states, tensions are growing, troops are maneuvering, shots ring out every night."

MARCH DAY

On such a day last spring
I placed your chair
So you could watch
As I set brick
Around the violet bed.
I thought I saw the sun
Shine through your pale thin hands.
Today, the robs hop
Where your chair stood.
White violets blow
Above the bricks I laid.

HE HEARS ME!

I LOOKED into the glory of the Father's handiwork;
The silence of the stars cried out His name!
I looked upon the tossing sea and felt his firm control
And knew the mountains, too, declared His fame.
Though small am I beside the sea, below the lofty peak,
A grain of desert sand beneath the sky,
Our God, the great Creator, gave His Son to die for me
And hears so graciously my faintest cry.

MARCH DAY

On such a day last spring
I placed your chair
So you could watch
As I set brick
Around the violet bed.
I thought I saw the sun
Shine through your pale thin hands.
Today, the robs hop
Where your chair stood.
White violets blow
Above the bricks I laid.

HE HEARS ME!

I LOOKED into the glory of the Father's handiwork;
The silence of the stars cried out His name!
I looked upon the tossing sea and felt his firm control
And knew the mountains, too, declared His fame.
Though small am I beside the sea, below the lofty peak,
A grain of desert sand beneath the sky,
Our God, the great Creator, gave His Son to die for me
And hears so graciously my faintest cry.

Detroit Takes Over First With Sweep

By RON RAPOPORT
Associated Press Sports Writer

The Detroit Tigers are going to have to teach Willie Horton how to slide and the Chicago White Sox are going to have to teach Ron Hansen how to keep his mouth shut.

Horton, the burly Tiger outfielder, drove in a key run with a single in the first game of his club's doubleheader victory over the Sox Tuesday, but when he tried to stretch it into a double, he was out on a throw from catcher J. C. Martin to Hansen despite an attempt at a slide.

Hansen, understandably pleased with himself even though he had a three-inch gash on his left arm from Horton's spikes, made a remark. That tore it for Willie who went after the infielder with a vengeance. It took the entire Detroit team the better part of five minutes to calm him down.

And he never did calm down enough to suit Chicago. In the eighth inning of the nightcap, Horton hit a tremendous home run to the upper deck in right field, tying the game and setting the stage for the eventual victory.

The Tigers moved into first place in the American League, 1½ games ahead of the Sox with their double triumph, 4-2 and 4-3. In other Memorial Day doubleheader action, Baltimore split with Cleveland, 5-4 and 2-3, Washington swept two from Kansas City 6-2 and 4-3 in 11 innings, Boston won a pair from California 5-4 and 6-1 and New York split with Minnesota 4-3 and 0-3.

Hansen, who at 6-foot-3 and 200 pounds was able to handle himself adequately in the fracas with the 5-10, 195-pound Horton, said later he couldn't remember what he'd said to so infuriate the Tiger outfielder.

But umpire John Rice described Hansen as saying, "Nice going. You're going to have to come in here again."

For his part, Horton said, "He thought I tried to spike him. I don't know all those trick slides."

The second game had its disagreements too, with Chicago Manager Eddie Stanky playing the game under protest apparently because Tiger pilot Mayo Smith made two trips to the mound in one inning to see pitcher Joe Sparma, in violation of the rules.

Cards No-Hit Dream Faded Into 21 Cincinnati Win

By DICK COUCH
Associated Press Sports Writer

After waiting eight years for his first big break, Dick Hughes was prepared to wait 55 minutes for the chance of a lifetime.

His patience proved to be a virtue — but his fast ball let him down just a few steps short of the Hall of Fame.

Hughes, a 29-year-old rookie who labored for eight years in the minor leagues before catching on with St. Louis late last season, pitched seven perfect innings against Cincinnati Tuesday night, striking out 12 and weathering a 55-minute rain delay after the sixth.

But hot-hitting Tony Perez led off the Reds' eighth with a triple, igniting a two-run rally, and the National League leaders nailed a 2-1 victory over Hughes and the Cardinals by pulling off a triple play in the ninth.

In another cliff-hanger at San Francisco, Jim Bunning ended opposing pitcher Juan Marichal's eight-game winning string with a ninth-inning homer, lifting the Philadelphia Phillies past the Giants 5-4.

Pittsburgh divided a doubleheader with Houston, winning the nightcap 4-3 after the Astros took the first game 3-2, Atlanta split with the Chicago Cubs, bowing 12-5 in the opener before rebounding for a 4-1 victory, and Los Angeles slugged the New York Mets 7-2 in a single game.

Perez tripled off the center field wall, extending his hitting streak to 17 games, after Hughes retired the first 21 batters he faced in a bid for the 11th perfect game in baseball history.

One out later, Vada Pinson tied the score 1-1 with a double and then scored the deciding run on a single by Leo Cardenas.

The Cards struck back in the ninth when Orlando Cepeda singled and advanced to second on Tim McCarver's single. Don Nottebart then replaced Reds' starter Jim Maloney and Phil Gagliano hit his first pitch to shortstop Cardenas.

Cardenas flipped to second baseman Tommy Helms for the force on McCarver and Helms' relay to first baseman Deron Johnson doubled Gagliano. Cepeda hesitated at third, then broke for the plate, but was nailed on Johnson's throw to catcher John Edwards, completing the game-ending triple play.

"I sent Nottebart in to pitch, hoping he would throw a low ball for a grounder," said Reds Manager Dave Bristol. "He sure did."

Hughes, who wound up with a three-hitter, 13 strikeouts and his second loss in four decisions, said he tried to slip a fast ball by Perez with the count 3-2 in the eighth.

"I was just trying for a strike," he said. "My slider was not going where I wanted it to, and after the rain stopped the game I began relying on my fast ball."

Bunning's second homer of the year broke up a 4-4 duel with Marichal, who had won eight in a row after dropping his first three decisions. Tom Haller hit two homers for the Giants, tying the score with a bases-empty blast in the eighth.

Donn Clendenon's double in the eighth inning scored the winning run for Pittsburgh in the nightcap after Rusty Staub's sixth inning homer gave the Astros their first-game victory.

Rookie Don Wilson checked the Pirates on seven hits in the opener and Ed Mathews hit his 496th career homer for the Astros in the second game.

Mack Jones drove in three runs with a triple and his second homer of the day, powering the Braves past the Cubs in their nightcap. Two-run homers by Billy Williams and Ron Santo, coupled with Ferguson Jenkins' 12-strikeout pitching, helped the Cubs breeze home in the first game.

Nowell Real Estate Opens Babe Ruth Season With 7-4 Win Over Reiss Dairy

Nowell Real Estate, behind the three-hit pitching of Ricky St. Cyn took the 1967 Babe Ruth season baseball opener at V. F. W. stadium Monday night, by defeating Reiss Dairy, 7-4.

The Nowell squad scored seven runs on 11 hits and handed the loss to Reiss Dairy's Leible.

Wilson went three for four at the plate in leading the Nowell offensive attack. Spencer and Voliva each collected two hits.

Newberry, Schlosser and Watkins collected Reiss' lone hits.

In the second game Harts Bread opened with a 9-4 win over the Bank of Sikeston.

The Bank's loss was attributed to errors and base on balls. Each squad collected four hits.

Throop got the only extra base hit in the opening night activities, a double in the fourth inning.

Tuesday night's activity had Anchor Toy taking a 5-1 win over Home Materials and Reiss Dairy battling Harts bread for nine innings and a 7-6 victory.

Miller hurled a two-hit, one-run game at Home Materials in the opening game for both squads.

Corn and Schatzley collected doubles for the only extra base hits

Beal allowed four hits and five runs and was issued his first loss of the season.

Reiss Dairy evened its record at 1-1 for the season with its nine inning victory over previously undefeated Harts Bread.

Newberry pitched his first victory of the season, allowing three hits and six runs in nine innings.

Reiss scored seven runs on six hits and handed Throop the loss.

Reiss' Newberry also contributed in the hitting department for his team as he collected two hits in three times to the plate, one of his hits a double.

Detroit Takes Over First With Sweep

By RON RAPOPORT
Associated Press Sports Writer

The Detroit Tigers are going to have to teach Willie Horton how to slide and the Chicago White Sox are going to have to teach Ron Hansen how to keep his mouth shut.

Horton, the burly Tiger outfielder, drove in a key run with a single in the first game of his club's doubleheader victory over the Sox Tuesday, but when he tried to stretch it into a double, he was out on a throw from catcher J. C. Martin to Hansen despite an attempt at a slide.

Hansen, understandably pleased with himself even though he had a three-inch gash on his left arm from Horton's spikes, made a remark. That tore it for Willie who went after the infielder with a vengeance. It took the entire Detroit team the better part of five minutes to calm him down.

And he never did calm down enough to suit Chicago. In the eighth inning of the nightcap, Horton hit a tremendous home run to the upper deck in right field, tying the game and setting the stage for the eventual victory.

The Tigers moved into first place in the American League, 1½ games ahead of the Sox with their double triumph, 4-2 and 4-3. In other Memorial Day doubleheader action, Baltimore split with Cleveland, 5-4 and 2-3, Washington swept two from Kansas City 6-2 and 4-3 in 11 innings, Boston won a pair from California 5-4 and 6-1 and New York split with Minnesota 4-3 and 0-3.

Hansen, who at 6-foot-3 and 200 pounds was able to handle himself adequately in the fracas with the 5-10, 195-pound Horton, said later he couldn't remember what he'd said to so infuriate the Tiger outfielder.

But umpire John Rice described Hansen as saying, "Nice going. You're going to have to come in here again."

For his part, Horton said, "He thought I tried to spike him. I don't know all those trick slides."

The second game had its disagreements too, with Chicago Manager Eddie Stanky playing the game under protest apparently because Tiger pilot Mayo Smith made two trips to the mound in one inning to see pitcher Joe Sparma, in violation of the rules.

Cards No-Hit Dream Faded Into 21 Cincinnati Win

By DICK COUCH
Associated Press Sports Writer

After waiting eight years for his first big break, Dick Hughes was prepared to wait 55 minutes for the chance of a lifetime.

His patience proved to be a virtue — but his fast ball let him down just a few steps short of the Hall of Fame.

Hughes, a 29-year-old rookie who labored for eight years in the minor leagues before catching on with St. Louis late last season, pitched seven perfect innings against Cincinnati Tuesday night, striking out 12 and weathering a 55-minute rain delay after the sixth.

But hot-hitting Tony Perez led off the Reds' eighth with a triple, igniting a two-run rally, and the National League leaders nailed a 2-1 victory over Hughes and the Cardinals by pulling off a triple play in the ninth.

In another cliff-hanger at San Francisco, Jim Bunning ended opposing pitcher Juan Marichal's eight-game winning string with a ninth-inning homer, lifting the Philadelphia Phillies past the Giants 5-4.

Pittsburgh divided a doubleheader with Houston, winning the nightcap 4-3 after the Astros took the first game 3-2, Atlanta split with the Chicago Cubs, bowing 12-5 in the opener before rebounding for a 4-1 victory, and Los Angeles slugged the New York Mets 7-2 in a single game.

Perez tripled off the center field wall, extending his hitting streak to 17 games, after Hughes retired the first 21 batters he faced in a bid for the 11th perfect game in baseball history.

One out later, Vada Pinson tied the score 1-1 with a double and then scored the deciding run on a single by Leo Cardenas.

The Cards struck back in the ninth when Orlando Cepeda singled and advanced to second on Tim McCarver's single. Don Nottebart then replaced Reds' starter Jim Maloney and Phil Gagliano hit his first pitch to shortstop Cardenas.

Cardenas flipped to second baseman Tommy Helms for the force on McCarver and Helms' relay to first baseman Deron Johnson doubled Gagliano. Cepeda hesitated at third, then broke for the plate, but was nailed on Johnson's throw to catcher John Edwards, completing the game-ending triple play.

"I sent Nottebart in to pitch, hoping he would throw a low ball for a grounder," said Reds Manager Dave Bristol. "He sure did."

Hughes, who wound up with a three-hitter, 13 strikeouts and his second loss in four decisions, said he tried to slip a fast ball by Perez with the count 3-2 in the eighth.

"I was just trying for a strike," he said. "My slider was not going where I wanted it to, and after the rain stopped the game I began relying on my fast ball."

Bunning's second homer of the year broke up a 4-4 duel with Marichal, who had won eight in a row after dropping his first three decisions. Tom Haller hit two homers for the Giants, tying the score with a bases-empty blast in the eighth. Donn Clendenon's double in the eighth inning scored the winning run for Pittsburgh in the nightcap after Rusty Staub's sixth inning homer gave the Astros their first-game victory.

Rookie Don Wilson checked the Pirates on seven hits in the opener and Ed Mathews hit his 496th career homer for the Astros in the second game.

Mack Jones drove in three runs with a triple and his second homer of the day, powering the Braves past the Cubs in their nightcap. Two-run homers by Billy Williams and Ron Santo, coupled with Ferguson Jenkins' 12-strikeout pitching, helped the Cubs breeze home in the first game.

Nowell Real Estate Opens Babe Ruth Season With 7-4 Win Over Reiss Dairy

Nowell Real Estate, behind the three-hit pitching of Ricky St. Cyn took the 1967 Babe Ruth season baseball opener at V. F. W. stadium Monday night, by defeating Reiss Dairy, 7-4.

The Nowell squad scored seven runs on 11 hits and handed the loss to Reiss Dairy's Leible.

Wilson went three for four at the plate in leading the Nowell offensive attack. Spencer and Voliva each collected two hits.

Newberry, Schlosser and Watkins collected Reiss' lone hits.

In the second game Harts Bread opened with a 9-4 win over the Bank of Sikeston.

The Bank's loss was attributed to errors and base on balls. Each squad collected four hits.

Throop got the only extra base hit in the opening night activities, a double in the fourth inning.

Tuesday night's activity had Anchor Toy taking a 5-1 win over Home Materials and Reiss Dairy battling Harts bread for nine innings and a 7-6 victory.

Miller hurled a two-hit, one-run game at Home Materials in the opening game for both squads.

Corn and Schatzley collected doubles for the only extra base hits

Beal allowed four hits and five runs and was issued his first loss of the season.

Reiss Dairy evened its record at 1-1 for the season with its nine inning victory over previously undefeated Harts Bread.

Newberry pitched his first victory of the season, allowing three hits and six runs in nine innings.

Reiss scored seven runs on six hits and handed Throop the loss.

Reiss' Newberry also contributed in the hitting department for his team as he collected two hits in three times to the plate, one of his hits a double.

Mrs. Bill Storey Paints, Knits, Refinishes Furniture

Editor's Note: This is the 39th in a series of articles about the home life of Sikeston area families.

By RUTH DILLENDER

Mrs. Janet Storey likes to paint, knit and antique furniture. She has refinished the table and chairs in her dining room.

Mrs. Storey is supervisor of the paste-up department of the Daily Standard. She has worked for the newspaper five years.

Her husband, Bill, is owner of the Storey and Son Construction Company. They live at 112 Ruth St. The couple has one son, Gary, 12 years old. The family attends the First Baptist church.

Mrs. Storey is a member of the Business and Professional Woman's club and served as recording secretary two years.

Mrs. Storey is embroidering a baby quilt for an infant the family is expecting in August.

Favorite recipes of the Storey family are:

DOUGHNUTS

3 eggs or 2 eggs plus 1 yolk
1 cup sugar
4 tablespoons melted butter
1 cup milk
3½ to 4½ cups flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon soda
Deep fat
Powdered sugar

Beat the eggs until thick, then add sugar and beat until light. Add the melted butter and milk. In 3 cups of flour sift the dry ingredients and add to the liquids. Add enough more flour to make as soft a dough as may be easily handled.

Roll out, cut and fry in deep fat, preferably lard, at 370 degrees to 375 degrees. Test with a piece of bread in a fat thermometer is not available. If the bread quickly fries a golden brown the fat is hot enough.

If the fat is not hot enough the doughnuts become grease-soaked. The added yolk helps prevent this also. Drain on brown paper and shake in bag containing powdered sugar. Doughnuts are best kept in a stone jar or crock, covered.

PEACH CRUMB PIE

Mix 2½ tablespoons tapioca, ¾ cup sugar, ½ teaspoon salt, 4 cups fresh peaches, 1 teaspoon lemon juice and let stand five minutes. Spoon into unbaked 9-inch pie shell. Sprinkle with topping and bake 45 to 50 minutes in 425 degree oven.

Topping:

Mix ½ cup brown sugar, 1/4 cup flour, 1/2 teaspoon cinnamon and 2½ tablespoons soft butter. Work with fork until size of peas.

BAR COOKIES

Heat oven to 350 degrees and grease a 7 by 11 pan.

SANCTUARY FOR SPIES

We have said it before but it needs to be said over and over that giving the U.S.S.R. permission to open up consulates in our cities is merely giving them additional sanctuaries from which to carry on their subversive and spying activities without fear of having to suffer any penalty therefore. No matter what one of these spies working in a consulte might do, we could not impose any penalty beyond insisting that he leave the country. Our citizens or defecting citizens from the Soviet Union could be kidnapped and held within these consulates entirely beyond the reach of our law officers. They could be spirited out of the country, as has been done before, and we might never know what had happened to them.

No reason of any importance has been advanced as to why these consulates should be opened, while many reasons have been brought forward showing the dangers that they will create for the safety of our country.

One rarely mentioned reason for not granting permission to the U.S.S.R. to open these consulates is the fact that, up to now, the Soviet Union has no consulates anywhere in North, South or Central America. Our Latin American neighbors to the south have so far resisted all pressure to permit Soviet Union consulates to be opened in their countries. If we not grant this permission to the Soviet Union it will be difficult if not impossible for our Latin American neighbors to continue to refuse it. They will undoubtedly succumb to continuing pressure and the communists will therefore acquire sanctuaries all over the Western Hemisphere from which to carry on their subversive activities. We ought not to help them in their efforts to overthrow western civilization either in our country or in the Central or South American countries.

Rationing Blueprint Ready If Needed

WASHINGTON (AP) — If wartime rationing should ever become necessary again, the government has a standby blueprint ready along with other nonmilitary mobilization plans.

But don't get edgy.

Federal planners gauging the impact of the Vietnam war on the U.S. economy stress they see no need on the horizon for rationing, a fading memory of World War II.

"I don't know of any substantial, serious proposal that we have on rationing or wage and price controls," says a top official of the Office of Emergency Planning — OEP.

Any presidential bid for rationing would need congressional approval before the blueprint became effective.

However, no one in Congress seems to be worrying aloud about rationing although there have been some mentions of the possibility of going back to wage-price controls.

Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., says he sees no likelihood of wage-price action by Congress this session "although pressure for it will be building up." And Sen. George D. Aiken, R-Vt., says any substantial broadening of the war will require more controls because of "soft spots in the economy."

A spokesman for the National Association of Manufacturers said that organization has given no thought to the return of controls. More emphatic was a spokesman for the President's Council of Economic Advisers who said the need for them is "as close to zero as you can get."

Still, OEP is ready to go if the wind changes.

Materials from which ration stamps and books could be printed are in standby storage right now in many parts of the country. Their existence isn't a secret but people are forever "discovering" it and raising concern about any imminent return of rationing.

When such a flap arises OEP explains that this is just preparedness material, put out at the local level because in a future war there might not be time to distribute it from Washington.

Should a really big war come, coordination of all nonmilitary mobilization would be centralized in the Office of Defense Resources, an agency that now exists just on paper. The head man would be America's "mobilization czar," an OEP official said.

By presidential order, OEP and other federal agencies engaged in preparedness planning draw up their proposals to meet emergencies on an ascending scale. At the bottom is "international tension" then limited war, general war, and finally national attack.

Some of the preparations for this last category strike a grim note in a nation which has escaped serious invasion since the War of 1812;

— To help wandering and homeless families find missing loved ones after an attack the Post Office Department has in readiness a registration system that in effect would be a refugee tracer service.

— The Federal Reserve Board has stored $18 billion in new bills in vaults around the country to keep the currency in circulation at normal levels for two years in case the Bureau of Engraving is destroyed.

— More than 2,600 packaged disaster hospitals have been stored throughout the country. When uncrated, each contains everything needed for a 200-bed hospital except the building.

— Several hundred radio stations are receiving fallout protection for their transmitters so they could remain on the air after an attack. These same stations are receiving emergency power generators — a number of which got a workout in the big 1965 blackout.

— The $6.8-billion stockpile of strategic and critical materials includes 180,000 pounds of opium to be used in pain-relieving drugs after any nuclear attack.

The stockpile is a group of 77 minerals, pharmaceuticals and other substances stored against the possibility of wartime shortage. One thing that isn't stockpiled is food-basics such as flour.

While plans in the "national attack" category may never get a tryout, some at the limited war level are in use now.

The Business and Defense Services Administration, a unit within the Department of Commerce, has for about two years been managing war production by following the procedures it had framed years before.

It makes the decisions that expedites one defense order at the expense of another when both carry priorities. Because of the Vietnam buildup it is being called on to intervene in 9,000 such prioerty logjams a year.

OEP's $7-million budget and $4 million for related agencies, plus the proposed $111-million budget of the Office of Civil Defense, are the major units in $122 million annually for federal departments engaged in nonmilitary preparedness planning.

The knowledge of what to do with them seems to have vanished, along with such skills as banking a coal furnace or cranking a Model T. There are plenty of tin cans around, as anyone who has visited a picnic site can testify, but once they're emptied their usefulness is over. In the old days, it had often just begun.

The simplest use for an empty container then was a game called kick the can. One boy could kick the can all by himself. He would give it a boot, then stroll along, hands in pickets, and kick it again.

If he had a friend with him, the game was livelier. One boy would kick it, then race the other for the honor of kicking it again. Played solo or even in pairs, it wasn't really much of a game, except that the flattened can made the kind of noise that annoyed the adults, which was reason enough for its popularity.

Shinny was another use for an empty tin can. The dictionary claims that shinny or shinney is a rude version of ice hockey. Apparently whoever wrote the definition grew up in a different neighborhood than mine. Where I lived, shinny was played on a gravel road. If it was played on a frozen pond, it was called shinny-onna-ice.

The can was used in place of a puck. First it had to be flattened by jumping on it repeatedly, preferably by the boy called "Fats." Then lines were scratched across the ice at each end of the pond to serve as goals. The idea was to knock the tin can across the line by hitting it with a stick picked up in the woods.

Sometimes a boy would hunt around until he found a limb that was bent at the end to form a natural version of a hockey stick, but this wasn't necessary. It was never a game taken very seriously - it wasn't really a disgrace if your team lost, the way it was to lose a game of baseball. The rules were whatever the boy with the loudest voice said they were, although it was not considered friendly to clout an opponent unless you were aiming at the flattened can.

The game was supposed to be played on skates - shinny-onna-ice, that is, as distinguished from shinny - but if a boy was hanging around the fire built near the pond without his skates he could serve as goalie.

Sometimes if you'd left your skates at home, a friend would lend you one of his. Then you'd each travel with a step and a glide, a step and a glide.

Another use for an empty tin can required one that was still solid on both ends, such as the kind that had contained evaporated milk. It was placed with one side flat on the ground. The foot was raised high and the heel of the shoe stamped down hard on it.

In this was done exactly right, the can was bent to conform to the shape of the heel, so it would stick to it while you walked. With a can fastened to the rear of each shoe, a boy could clump up and down a concrete sidewalk, making a truly remarkable racket.

Parents would come roaring out on porches. Neighbors would slam windows shut. An afternoon that had been monotonous would suddenly crackle with shouted threats and impending violence.

I can hear it now, the clunk and scrape and clatter of a small boy marching down a walk with tin on his heels, but only in memory. The sound has vanished, the invention of the unsung genius who first realized an empty can could be fastened to a boy's shoe heel has been lost to the world. The old skills have been allowed to die out among the young, which may explain why so many double-ended cans gleam in the headlights' beams along the rural roadsides. In the old days, the adults hid them carefully away. The knew that unless they did, some lad would go clanking and scraping past the window in triumph.

Mrs. Bill Storey Paints, Knits, Refinishes Furniture

Editor's Note: This is the 39th in a series of articles about the home life of Sikeston area families.

By RUTH DILLENDER

Mrs. Janet Storey likes to paint, knit and antique furniture. She has refinished the table and chairs in her dining room.

Mrs. Storey is supervisor of the paste-up department of the Daily Standard. She has worked for the newspaper five years.

Her husband, Bill, is owner of the Storey and Son Construction Company. They live at 112 Ruth St. The couple has one son, Gary, 12 years old. The family attends the First Baptist church.

Mrs. Storey is a member of the Business and Professional Woman's club and served as recording secretary two years.

Mrs. Storey is embroidering a baby quilt for an infant the family is expecting in August.

Favorite recipes of the Storey family are:

DOUGHNUTS

3 eggs or 2 eggs plus 1 yolk
1 cup sugar
4 tablespoons melted butter
1 cup milk
3½ to 4½ cups flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon soda
Deep fat
Powdered sugar

Beat the eggs until thick, then add sugar and beat until light. Add the melted butter and milk. In 3 cups of flour sift the dry ingredients and add to the liquids. Add enough more flour to make as soft a dough as may be easily handled.

Roll out, cut and fry in deep fat, preferably lard, at 370 degrees to 375 degrees. Test with a piece of bread in a fat thermometer is not available. If the bread quickly fries a golden brown the fat is hot enough.

If the fat is not hot enough the doughnuts become grease-soaked. The added yolk helps prevent this also. Drain on brown paper and shake in bag containing powdered sugar. Doughnuts are best kept in a stone jar or crock, covered.

PEACH CRUMB PIE

Mix 2½ tablespoons tapioca, ¾ cup sugar, ½ teaspoon salt, 4 cups fresh peaches, 1 teaspoon lemon juice and let stand five minutes. Spoon into unbaked 9-inch pie shell. Sprinkle with topping and bake 45 to 50 minutes in 425 degree oven.

Topping:

Mix ½ cup brown sugar, 1/4 cup flour, 1/2 teaspoon cinnamon and 2½ tablespoons soft butter. Work with fork until size of peas.

BAR COOKIES

Heat oven to 350 degrees and grease a 7 by 11 pan.

Mix 1 cup graham cracker crumbs and ½ tablespoons oleo melted. Cover pan with mixture. Then add in layers 1 cup chocolate chips, 1 cup pecans, 1 cup coconut and 1 can Eagle Brand milk.

Bake 30 minutes. Leave in pan to cool. Then slice. Do not overbake.

BEEF CHUCK ROAST

3 lbs. beef chuck
2 tablespoons A-1 steak sauce
1 package dry onion soup mix
1 can cream mushroom soup
Potato halves

Spread meat with sauce, layer of potatoes, onion soup mix and and then mushroom soup. Wrap in heavy duty aluminum foil and seal. Bake 3 hours at 350 degrees. Add 20 minutes cooking time for each extra pound of meat.

Five Towns May Get Toll-Free Phone Calls

CAPE GIRARDEAU - Scott City, Chaffee, Benton, Oran and Delta will have additional telephone service by early 1969 if the telephone customers there approve a proposal by Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

That proposal will eliminate toll charges between these cities with only a slight increase in monthly rates, J. W. Smith, Southwestern Bell manager, said.

It is part of an over-all program instigated by the Missouri Public Service Commission to eliminate all 10-cent toll calls. Southwestern Bell will send all telephone subscribers in these areas public - opinion postcards soon. Initiation of the new service will depend upon results of the survey.

Southwestern Bell plans to offer toll-free calls from Chaffee to Scott City, Benton, Oran and Delta. In turn, telephone customers in those four cities may call Chaffee toll-free.

Extended area service also will include toll-free calls between Scott City and Benton, plus Delta and Oran.

"The new service will eliminate long-distance charges on more than 73,000 calls placed annually between these cities," Smith explained.

He cited one example where Chaffee customers who can now call only 1,400 other customers toll-free will be able to call 5,600 telephones toll-free under the new plan.

Smith said this new service will involve laying new underground cables. A similar toll-free service between Cape Girardeau, Scott City and Jackson went into effect in November.

Fire Razes Independence Landmark

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. AP - A tremendous explosion and fire destroyed a major part of the old block-long Waggoner-Gates Milling Co., building in Independence Monday afternoon.

The loss was estimated at $700,000 to $1 million.

One of Jackson County's oldest landmarks, the original part of the Waggoner flour mill had stood since 1860. Most of the original mill, built with foot-square oak timbers, collapsed after flames burned out the interior.

The six-acre mill site is six blocks southwest of the Independence square.

The explosion knocked out windows of business buildings on the north side of the square. Windows in houses north of the plant were shattered.

Witnesses said the metal roof of the building was blown several hundred feet into the air and scattered like paper. Flames shot upward immediately and were out of control when firemen arrived.

Fire Chief Thomas Pollard said something might have touched off a dust explosion.

Charles V. Shoemaker, foreman of the milling company, was at his home just north of the mill. He said he saw lightning strike the head house of the five-story elevator.

"I was standing in the front yard and saw lightening," Shoemaker said. "It had a pretty fire on it. It hit the head house and blew out the front of the house. It went ablaze and then everything went up."

The head house atop the elevator contained machinery.

Michael Selders, one of the owners, said the mill contained 220,000 bushels of wheat, corn and milo.

Air Force to Freeze Many On Active Duty

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The Air Force, pinched for veteran pilots and other seasoned officers, has announced a move to freeze on active duty up to 3,700 regulars who want to retire or resign from the service.

Delays in such retirements or resignations will last up to a year and will apply to officers from colonel on down, the Air Force said.

It announced that each case will be handled individually under a procedure put into effect on last Thursday.

"This action is being taken to assure a continuing source of experienced officers needed throughout the Air Force," the statement said, "and to enable the Air Force to meet future requirements for officers having needed skills."

Nothing was said in the statement about a pilot shortage, but the Air Force has had to transfer many veteran pilots from desk jobs back to the cockpit in order to meet the enlarged needs growing out of the air war in Vietnam.

Missourians Favor Warning About Cigarettes

COLUMBIA -- In recent years, public health specialists have intensified the campaign to discourage smoking. They have advocated two approaches in the campaign: (1) reducing the demand for tobacco, and (2) limiting the supply of tobacco.

As pointed out in the last Missouri Poll, the campaign to reduce the demand for tobacco has not been characterized by any widespread success. Although cigarette sales fell as much as 30 per cent following U.S. Surgeon General Luther Terry's release of reports linking cigarette smoking to lung cancer and a variety of other diseases, cigarette sales have now returned to all-time highs. In Missouri, virgually all smokers have heard about the Terry reports but have decided the reports either are untrue or simply don't apply to them. Only a handful of former smokers trace their decision to stop smoking to the Terry reports.

Consequently, many public health specialists argue for the other alternative. If people are not willing to reduce or stop their smoking voluntarily and if smoking is harmful to their health, the argument runs, then the government must in effect impose a quarantine. Exposure to tobacco or the encouragements to use tobacco must be reduced by governmental action.

Such action must, at some point or another, involve the United States Congress. But the Congress has generally been thought to favor tobacco - related interests. Twenty-five states raise tobacco, and Congressmen and Senators from states where tobacco is a major industry have been entrenched in committee and floor leadership positions for many years. The tobacco industry contributes heavy subsidies to the fields of entertainment, advertising, and mass media -- all important sectors of other states' economies.

When the Federal Trade Commission sought to require a warning on cigarette packages indicating the smoking - lung cancer linkage, in accord with the Terry report recommendations, Congress overrode the FTC's authority by providing a substantially weaker directive. The Congress also refused to fund a U.S. Public Health Service request for $1.9 million for research and education on why people smoke and how to help them stop or keep them from starting.

At the time Congress made these decisions, it had only limited information about the kinds of controls that people wanted imposed on the tobacco industry.

In an effort to find out the extent to which Missourians advocate or accept governmental controls eliminating or limiting the supply of cigarettes, the Public Opinion Survey Unit asked its statewide sample of nearly 1,000 adults a series of questions on the subject. The questions were paraphrased from a series of proposals for tobacco regulation introduced in recent sessions of the Congress. They were asked its statewide sample of nearly 1,000 adults a series of questions on the subject. The questions were paraphrased from a series of proposals for tobacco regulation introduced in recent sessions of the Congress. They were asked to "agree" or "disagree" with each statement. The results for the adult Missouri sample are presented below, the scores for present smokers are presented in parentheses.

Proposal, Agree, Disagree, and Don't Know

Cigarette advertising should be limited so it is less likely to reach children and teen-agers.

The Missouri Poll is in the following order:

Proposal, Agree, Disagree, Don't Know.

Cigarette advertising should be limited so it is less likely to reach children and teen-agers.

72%	23%	5%
(67)	(28)	(5)

Cigarette packages, tobacco tins, and so forth should have labels on them warning people that smoking may be harmful to health.

66%	26%	8%
(60)	(33)	(7)

The government should increase its publicity to warn people that smoking is dangerous to health.

66%	28%	6%
(59)	(36)	(5)

Cigarette sales should be like liquor: nobody under 21 should be permitted to buy them.

65%	28%	7%
(62)	(33)	(5)

Cigarette advertisements on TV and in the papers should warn people that smoking may be harmful to health.

60%	33%	7%
(53)	(40)	(7)

Cigarette packages should have specific warnings that smoking may cause lung cancer and other diseases.

58%	33%	9%
(51)	(41)	(8)

The tobacco industry should be forced to come up with a "safe" cigarette, or else take its product off the market.

44%	41%	15%
(33)	(53)	(14)

Tobacco growers get farm subsidies and price supports. These should be withdrawn.

(29)	(55)	(16)

The table indicates that large majorities of the Missouri population would support most of the proposed regulations. Generally, twice as many respondents support the regulations compared with those who oppose them. The strongest support comes on regulations which would limit the supply or the desire for tobacco among new smokers (children) and on the more vague warnings about the general health hazard involved in smoking. Support is reduced somewhat as the proposed regulations become more specific about the nature of the health hazard. Support moves well under the 50 percent mark when the proposals call for coercive or punitive governmental action; in fact, in the case of withdrawal of farm subsidies to tobacco growers, opposition outweighs support.

If the attitudes of present smokers alone are examined (49 percent of the sample), even then support outweighs opposition on all proposed regulations except the two most punitive ones.

It would appear that as far as Missouri residents are concerned, the Congress could enact or administrative agencies could impose a series of controls designed to limit the supply and demand for tobacco, with only a limited threat of popular opposition reaching majority proportions. Opposition is most likely to come from tobacco users. Nevertheless, the government cannot move with impunity in the area; if the action would threaten to deprive individuals of a share of their livelihood, or if it overturned long - established behavior patterns, opposition in majority proportions would likely emerge.

WHAT IS IMPORTANT

Lord, give me a heart that often sings,
And finds great joy in little things;
The song of a bird, the smell of a rose;
A gentle breeze that playfully blows;
A savory meal with loved ones dear;
The sound of a church bell sweet and clear;
A mother's love, a child's caress;
These are the things that truly bless.

Liquor Bill Clears Senate Committee

JEFFERSON CITY AP - A Senate committee reported favorably Tuesday a bill to permit sale of liquor by the drink at plush lake resorts and large suburban restaurants.

The controversial measure squeezed through the House last week by a close margin after being defeated previously.

It would affect several Lake of the Ozarks resorts and some at Bull Shoals and Table Rock reservoirs. Only resorts on lakes with a shoreline of at least 250 miles could qualify.

Meanwhile the powerful Senate Economics Committee continued to cling to several major bills, including some of the governor's recommendations.

Still stuck in the committee are bills to establish a new state agency on tourism, a community affairs department, a bill to let unemployed fathers live at home without endangering their families aid to independent children and one to extend the food stamp plan on a statewide basis.

The House killed a bill that would have given local agents of the Department of Revenue 2 per cent of the sales tax they collect on such things as automobiles.

The extra money would be in addition to the fees they now collect from purchasers of automobile title, driver licenses and so on.

The measure was brought up for House consideration from its position on what was supposed to be a calendar of non-controversial bills.

But opposition developed at once.

An effort was made to get the author, Rep. J. R. Wells, D-Centerview, to lay the bill over until some further information could be obtained from the Department of Revenue. The office was not open on this holiday.

Wells refused and the bill was defeated 55-84.

He said it would save the state money but opponents said it could only result in a drain on sales tax receipts.

The House passed and sent to the Senate a bill letting local school districts levy a special tax for the transportation of students to a state supported junior or senior college or university.

It was offered by Rep. Charles Dickey, D-Mexico. The Mexico school district has been providing transportation of its students to and from the University of Missouri at Columbia. The cost has been met by subscriptions from Mexico businessmen.

A few members questioned its constitutionality but others said it was a novel way of meeting the need for higher education.

Rep. James I. Spainhower, D-Marshall, said his education committee was "genuinely enthusiastic about it. It is an innovation that can do no harm and could do a lot of good."

Spainhower pointed out the residents of a school district would have the right to vote on it and to decide what state-supported school would be used.

Monday the House advanced a bill to let the legislature set hunting and fishing fees.

Rep. E. J. Cantrell, D-Overland, House appropriations chairman introduced the first installment of the final catch-all or omnibus bill.

It carries minor routine appropriations for state agencies and to meet some state obligations.

He said the committee probably would make extensive additions during its consideration.

The second and last installment of the catch-all bill, he said, will come in the final days of the session and will include the money to finance any new or expanded programs enacted by this session of the legislature.

Remap Bills Pondered by Committee

JEFFERSON CITY AP - The House Committee on Congressional Redistricting took up the annual hassle Monday night, hearing all of the Senate and House bills that would line up new districts for U.S. congressmen.

It is a political hot potato.

Republicans, Democrats, and St. Louis Democrats have all formed factions and are trying to figure out how they can come out best.

Rep. Harold L. Holliday, D-Kansas City, sponsored a House bill that would make two congressional districts out of St. Louis county. As it stands now there are three congressmen who have part of their district in St. Louis city or St. Louis county.

Holliday is president of the state NCAAP, an attorney, and an influential member of the House. His redistricting plan would give the Negro population of St. Louis a chance to elect the first Negro congressman from Missouri.

Holliday said he understands from the Supreme Court decision that Missouri's congressional districts do not meet the one-man one-vote requirement and that the court also says districts should be contiguous and compact.

"Some limitations on gerrymandering have to be made," Holliday said.

He also reminded the committee that the session is drawing to an end and said some concessions would have to be made by everyone.

"It is not reasonable to think all 163 members of the House will go for any plan," he added.

"If we had 163 members draw a map for congressional redistricting we would have 163 different maps," Halliday emphasized.

Sen. Omer H. Avery, D-Troy, presented his plan that had passed the senate earlier.

When questioned by Rep. Thomas A. Walsh, D-St. Louis, a member of the House Committee, Avery said, "We want St. Louis county and they don't want us."

Ever since the Supreme Court decision reapportionment has been a problem in the Missouri Legislature.

The Missouri House, Senate and the congressional districts were all redistricted during the last session and resulted in bitter political disputes.

The congressional redistricting was the only one that was ruled out of line when the U. S. Supreme Court upheld a federal court edict.

If the general assembly is not able to reach an agreement during this session, which ends June 30, then either a special session will have to be called by the governor or all congressmen will have to run at large.

Five Towns May Get Toll-Free Phone Calls

CAPE GIRARDEAU - Scott City, Chaffee, Benton, Oran and Delta will have additional telephone service by early 1969 if the telephone customers there approve a proposal by Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

That proposal will eliminate toll charges between these cities with only a slight increase in monthly rates, J. W. Smith, Southwestern Bell manager, said.

It is part of an over-all program instigated by the Missouri Public Service Commission to eliminate all 10-cent toll calls. Southwestern Bell will send all telephone subscribers in these areas public - opinion postcards soon. Initiation of the new service will depend upon results of the survey.

Southwestern Bell plans to offer toll-free calls from Chaffee to Scott City, Benton, Oran and Delta. In turn, telephone customers in those four cities may call Chaffee toll-free.

Extended area service also will include toll-free calls between Scott City and Benton, plus Delta and Oran.

"The new service will eliminate long-distance charges on more than 73,000 calls placed annually between these cities," Smith explained.

He cited one example where Chaffee customers who can now call only 1,400 other customers toll-free will be able to call 5,600 telephones toll-free under the new plan.

Smith said this new service will involve laying new underground cables. A similar toll-free service between Cape Girardeau, Scott City and Jackson went into effect in November.

SMYRNA, Tenn. -- Robert E. Robinson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Willie E. Robinson of Lilbourn, Mo., has been promoted to airman first class in the U. S. Air Force.

Airman Robinson is a fuel specialist at Sewart AFB, Tenn.

The airman is a graduate of Howardsville High School.

His wife, Irma, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Hughes of Lilbourn.

FT. POLK, LA. (AHTNC) -- Army Private James E. Pemberton, 22, son of Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Pemberton, 905 Rodney St., Charleston, Mo., completed nine weeks of advanced infantry training May 26 at Ft. Polk, La.

During his guerrilla training, he lived under simulated Vietnam conditions for five days, fighting off night attacks and conducting raids on "enemy" villages. He was taught methods of removing booby traps, setting ambushes, and avoiding enemy ambushes.

Other specialized training included small unit tactics, map reading, land mine warfare, communications, and firing the M-14 rifle, M-60 machine gun and 3.5-inch rocket launcher.

His wife, Juanita, lives in Bertrand, Mo.

FT. ORD, CALIF. (AHTNC) - Army Private Thomas W. Lawfield Jr., 19, whose parents live on Star Route, East Prairie, Mo., completed a field communications crewman course at Ft. Ord, Calif., May 26.

During the course, he was trained to string wire from the field to the communication center. Instruction was also given in basic electricity, switchboard installation and operation and pole climbing.

WHAT IS IMPORTANT

Lord, give me a heart that often sings,
And finds great joy in little things;
The song of a bird, the smell of a rose;
A gentle breeze that playfully blows;
A savory meal with loved ones dear;
The sound of a church bell sweet and clear;
A mother's love, a child's caress;
These are the things that truly bless.

Liquor Bill Clears Senate Committee

JEFFERSON CITY AP - A Senate committee reported favorably Tuesday a bill to permit sale of liquor by the drink at plush lake resorts and large suburban restaurants.

The controversial measure squeezed through the House last week by a close margin after being defeated previously.

It would affect several Lake of the Ozarks resorts and some at Bull Shoals and Table Rock reservoirs. Only resorts on lakes with a shoreline of at least 250 miles could qualify.

Meanwhile the powerful Senate Economics Committee continued to cling to several major bills, including some of the governor's recommendations.

Still stuck in the committee are bills to establish a new state agency on tourism, a community affairs department, a bill to let unemployed fathers live at home without endangering their families aid to independent children and one to extend the food stamp plan on a statewide basis.

The House killed a bill that would have given local agents of the Department of Revenue 2 per cent of the sales tax they collect on such things as automobiles.

The extra money would be in addition to the fees they now collect from purchasers of automobile title, driver licenses and so on.

The measure was brought up for House consideration from its position on what was supposed to be a calendar of non-controversial bills.

But opposition developed at once.

An effort was made to get the author, Rep. J. R. Wells, D-Centerview, to lay the bill over until some further information could be obtained from the Department of Revenue. The office was not open on this holiday.

Wells refused and the bill was defeated 55-84.

He said it would save the state money but opponents said it could only result in a drain on sales tax receipts.

The House passed and sent to the Senate a bill letting local school districts levy a special tax for the transportation of students to a state supported junior or senior college or university.

It was offered by Rep. Charles Dickey, D-Mexico. The Mexico school district has been providing transportation of its students to and from the University of Missouri at Columbia. The cost has been met by subscriptions from Mexico businessmen.

A few members questioned its constitutionality but others said it was a novel way of meeting the need for higher education.

Rep. James I. Spainhower, D-Marshall, said his education committee was "genuinely enthusiastic about it. It is an innovation that can do no harm and could do a lot of good."

Spainhower pointed out the residents of a school district would have the right to vote on it and to decide what state-supported school would be used.

Monday the House advanced a bill to let the legislature set hunting and fishing fees.

Rep. E. J. Cantrell, D-Overland, House appropriations chairman introduced the first installment of the final catch-all or omnibus bill.

It carries minor routine appropriations for state agencies and to meet some state obligations.

He said the committee probably would make extensive additions during its consideration.

The second and last installment of the catch-all bill, he said, will come in the final days of the session and will include the money to finance any new or expanded programs enacted by this session of the legislature.

Remap Bills Pondered by Committee

JEFFERSON CITY AP - The House Committee on Congressional Redistricting took up the annual hassle Monday night, hearing all of the Senate and House bills that would line up new districts for U.S. congressmen.

It is a political hot potato. Republicans, Democrats, and St. Louis Democrats have all formed factions and are trying to figure out how they can come out best.

Rep. Harold L. Holliday, D-Kansas City, sponsored a House bill that would make two congressional districts out of St. Louis county. As it stands now there are three congressmen who have part of their district in St. Louis city or St. Louis county.

Holliday is president of the state NCAAP, an attorney, and an influential member of the House. His redistricting plan would give the Negro population of St. Louis a chance to elect the first Negro congressman from Missouri.

Holliday said he understands from the Supreme Court decision that Missouri's congressional districts do not meet the one-man one-vote requirement and that the court also says districts should be contiguous and compact.

"Some limitations on gerrymandering have to be made," Holliday said.

He also reminded the committee that the session is drawing to an end and said some concessions would have to be made by everyone.

"It is not reasonable to think all 163 members of the House will go for any plan," he added.

"If we had 163 members draw a map for congressional redistricting we would have 163 different maps," Halliday emphasized.

Sen. Omer H. Avery, D-Troy, presented his plan that had passed the senate earlier.

When questioned by Rep. Thomas A. Walsh, D-St. Louis, a member of the House Committee, Avery said, "We want St. Louis county and they don't want us."

Ever since the Supreme Court decision reapportionment has been a problem in the Missouri Legislature.

The Missouri House, Senate and the congressional districts were all redistricted during the last session and resulted in bitter political disputes.

The congressional redistricting was the only one that was ruled out of line when the U. S. Supreme Court upheld a federal court edict.

If the general assembly is not able to reach an agreement during this session, which ends June 30, then either a special session will have to be called by the governor or all congressmen will have to run at large.

Stock Market Cycles Risky to Follow

NEW YORK (AP) — The proud boast so often heard that the war in Vietnam is one that the nation's huge economy can accommodate with little effort is being shown more and more today to be highly inflated with air.

It is a small war relative to a big economy, but it is having its effect.

Vietnam will cost something more than $22 billion this coming fiscal year, less than 3 per cent of the gross national product of about $765 billion. But this financially "easy" war contributed to inflation last year and it might force a general tax hike this year. That is impact.

The budget deficit, it now appears, will top any previous deficit, totaling perhaps $30 billion, a good deal of it the result of the Vietnam war.

And, since the budget deficit will be potentially inflationary, pressure has increased for a cut in federal domestic spending. Parts of the Great Society, including the slogan, could become victims.

There is no question, therefore, that Vietnam is having its impact; no nation can afford such spending without consequences.

Vietnam is, however, only a fraction of our total commitment to military or defense spending. President Johnson's budget provides for $73 billion to be so spent, a figure that likely will swell.

Since projections for the gross national product, the total of a nation's goods and services, range from $740 billion to $790 billion for the year, defense spending still is likely to be no more at any time than about 10 per cent of GNP.

In the Korean War, when defense expenditures were lower, they represented a far higher percentage of gross national product, which then was about $265 billion. Again, although Vietnam is big in relation to Korea, it is smaller than Korea in relation to GNP.

It is this enormous size of the American production machine, many times larger than most other nations, that hides much of Vietnam's impact. But that impact is there. There is no debate about it.

What is still debatable is the extent of the pressure on the economy. Some critics of the administration maintain the pressure could have been lessened if the costs had been foreseen and arrangements made earlier for paying the bills.

It is possible that under perfect administering, and with a lot of luck, the impact could have been nearly hidden. This would have assumed more accurate projections of expenditures and better timing on fiscal measures meant to hold down inflation.

As it is, we have found that prices are higher than housewives are willing to pay and probably will go higher; interest rates are under upward pressure again after reaching 40-year highs last year; high mortgage rates are delaying a forecasted housing boom.

Perhaps as a consequence of tight money and rising rates, stock prices plunged last year and some blue chips remain depressed. The stock decline, in a limited sense, can therefore be blamed partly on Vietnam.

Some economists say, in defense of administration efforts, that the fact the economy still continues to support Americans in a manner that neither they nor any other people have ever before enjoyed is compliment enough to the administration's wisdom. Even in nonwar years, they say, we have had high taxes and interest, inflation and housing problems.

A big concern of the economists, however, is that should there be a further buildup in Vietnam—or another flareup in Korea or the Mideast—the rise in defense spending will corner more and more of the nation's productivity.

A war economy is a distant threat, but its consequences—as we have seen—sometimes are felt in advance.

An elderly lady, anxious to be approved for residence in a new retirement village, filled out the application with a bit of anxiety. She answered the questions on the state of her health and then signed her name and address. After zip, she wrote firmly: "Normal."

TV Information Center Does Booming Business

By GENE HANDSAKER

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The telephones in Kellam deForest's office rang busily.

"Gunsmoke" wanted to know: Could an Indian testify at a court trial in Kansas in 1875? He could.

"I Spy" asked: How is milk delivered to hotels in Morrocco? Answer: in big cans, as in America.

DeForest, 40, wiry and intense, a distant cousin of the late inventor Dr. Lee deForest, is a fast fact-finder to the television industry. He is also a professional nit-picker who finds flaws in scripts.

A "Star Trek" scenario discovered a planet without variations in surface temparature. In a seven-page analysis finding 52 points technical-minded viewers might challenge in this script alone, deForest reported: "A planet without variations in surface temperature is impossible."

With two woman assistants, deForest, a former Yale history major, operates in what used to be the RKO Studio library, now part of the Desilu TV empire.

Five thousand reference books range from "Games and Songs of American Children" to "Executions—Legal Ways of Death Throughout the World." Table and shelves are piled high with magazines, 80 file drawers contain photos of almost anything imaginable, and the 1910 Encyclopedia Brittanica gets more use than the current edition.

"I wanted to get into show business but found you can't get anywhere in this town without something to sell," says deForest, whose only competitors are the major movie studios' libraries. "With the rise of television, I could see there was going to be a need for this service."

Since 1951 he has served 38 TV series, the present dozen including "Get Smart," "Wild, Wild West," "Hogan's Heroes," "Big Valley" and Lucy. Charges are on a per-show or hourly basis.

The phones ring. Which college graduated the most U.S. presidents? Answer: Harvard—5. Who won the Kentucky Derby in 1916? George Smith. Who wrote "Rigoletto"?

"Verdi, in 1851," replied Mrs. Joan Pearce, one of deForest's assistants. The producer hummed a tune over the phone and asked her to identify it. "La Donna e Mobile," she said.

Part of deForest Research's service is ascertaining that characters in scripts don't bear real people's names, to forestall suits or simple embarrassment.

A character in the Navy-oriented "Star Trek" was to be "Adm. Westervliet." Said Mrs. Pearce: "We recommended a change because in the Navy today there is a Capt. Westervliet. We try to protect people who might get ribbed about it."

Another call. "Did children in the old West have toy balloons?"

"We'll have to work on that," said deForest.

EVERY 4TH NEW HOME HAS CENTRAL AIR CONDITIONING

One out of every four new homes being built today has central air conditioning, the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau reports.

One reason for this is the great increase in the cooling of "public" buildings such as stores, theaters and restaurants, as well as factories, offices and other places of employment. The American family is exposed to comfort cooling both at work and at play, and its members don't want to go home to a sweltering house.

Air conditioning enthusiasts point to health advantages too. Doctors often recommend it for hay fever and allergy sufferers and heart patients.

Half asleep, in the early hours of the morning, I stumbled to answer an insistent pounding at the door and was stunned to see my wife -- rain-soaked and tear-stained -- accompanied by an exasperated policeman who asked, "Do you know this dame, mister? She says she lives here." When I convinced him that she was my wife, he threw me a sympathic look and left.

I then realized that my wife was wearing an old trenchcoat over her nightgown and was clutching a flashlight. Finally, after tears and laughter ceased, she told me what had happened. "Trouble," our wayward cat, had not come home that night. When the patrolman discovered my wife, said worried spouse was searching the block, peering into bushes and under cars.

The officer's understandable suspicion of her character -- in view of her actions and attire -- was clinched when he asked her what she was up to.

Without thinking, she had blurted hysterically, "I'm looking for Trouble."

Economic Effects of Viet War Becoming Pronounced

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — Does the stock market have a consistent rather than erratic pattern of highs and lows, its high months and its low months, its periods of wild bulls and hibernating bears?

Any believer in cycles — and there are millions of them with millions of pieces of data to show millions of patterns — will answer positively. But not everyone believes in cycles.

Nevertheless, some evidence seems to have accumulated that there is a good chance the market will rise in January, April, July and October, the first months of the new quarters, barring any sharp drop in the general economy.

In between, in the months of February, March and May for instance, prices may remain weak or even slump.

Now, to state a stock market theory is to have it contradicted very shortly afterward, and there is no assurance that this one will have a long life. It does, though, seem to have as much validity as the hemline theory — that stock averages rise or fall with female hemlines — or the sun spot theories, or the myriad theories computed from averages.

There has never been an absence of such theories, for the inability to predict how the mass of stock-buying people will act is the common factor that makes stock forecasting the game and business it is and not the science its market letter writers strive for.

However, the tendency has been for many of these, once stated, to become so entwined in their own logic and developed to such an intricacy that they are just about unworkable. Not so the three-month cycle.

As stated by Philip A. Cavalier, senior analyst for a big brokerage house, the pattern has appeared fairly regularly and logically when not disturbed by extreme economic or political news.

The reason, he states, is that early in these months of January, April, July and October the majority of companies report their earnings for the previous three months. The government also reports on the general economy. Given a hard numerical report of performance, and not just another estimate or rumor, buyers come into the market.

Thereafter, as uncertainty develops during the next two months the buyers remain safely on the sidelines. With demand weak, prices fall.

If this reasoning is sound it provokes the thought that in buying on past news, rather than on some evidence of future gains, a lot of market theories seem to be contradicted. But this seeming contradiction is not quite that; the past is merely used as assurance of the future.

Uncertainty is the key word in understanding this interpretation of mass psychology. Buyers are uncertain of the future but, in having some proof of past performance, they are willing to gamble it will continue for another quarter at least.

Cigarette Causes Death of Boy

GOODFELLOW TERRACE, Mo. AP - A 17-year-old boy was burned to death Monday on a couch which St. Louis county police said was set afire by a cigarette.

Police identified the victim as Robert O. Trentmann, of Goodfellow Terrace, a St. Louis suburb.

Police reported the boy's parents were out of town and said the fire smoldered for a long time before breaking out in flames.

An American missionary and his family were returning from the former French Camerouns, West Africa. So that the children would not look conspicuous in homemade, native clothes, the mother outfitted them in the latest fashion from a mail - order catalogue. But they soon betrayed their background. As the family walked along a street in paris, a stopover on their homeward journey, the parents realized that everyone was staring at them. Turning around, they discovered that the two little ones who trailed behind were casually walking along, carrying their suitcases on their heads.

Food Costs: Excellent Now, But Outlook Is For Change, Freeman Says

Consumers, says Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman, never had it so good. But, he warns, it may not continue that way.

At a recent meeting with editors and writers of consumer-oriented publications, Secretary Freeman pointed out that consumers are enjoying an ever-diminishing demand on their take-home pay for food.

Consumers now spend only about 18 percent of their take-home pay for food. Ten years ago it took nearly 21 percent to feed a family. Twenty years ago one-fourth of a paycheck went for food.

If the percentage of take-home pay were the same today as it was in 1947 (25 percent), it would cost a family of four about $780 more for food in a year.

Another way of looking at the consumer's unmatched purchasing power is to consider how long it takes to earn enough money to purchase a week's food needs.

In just one 8-hour day, a worker can earn enough to buy food for his family for a week. Twenty years ago it took 13 hours of work.

Interestingly, diets have improved and Americans are eating more. . . despite this decrease in cost. In the last 10 years, food consumption per capita has increased 2-1/2 percent. A larger percentage of quality foods are being consumed now than ever before, too.

The problem is, Secretary Freeman points out, that farmers are not getting a fair share of today's economy.

Admittedly food prices are higher than they were 20 years ago, but food prices and farm prices are completely different things.

Farm prices - the prices paid to farmers for their products on the farm - are 5 to 7 percent lower than 20 years ago. What's more, the farmers' portion of each dollar spent on food in the store is less today than in 1947.

Essentially farmers are earning two-thirds of what non-farmers earn. Yet they are producing a great abundance of quality food at modest retail prices. One farm worker today can provide the food and fiber needs of about 40 people; 10 years ago he could supply only 23 people.

Freeman warns that farm prices that are "ironically and incongruously low in today's otherwise booming economy" could destroy the family farm system that has brought the consumer such a modestly-priced, nutritious food abundance.

"Consumers must realize," he continued, "that if farm prices are not strengthened, the nation's family farm system could be replaced by corporate operations that conceivably could so control food supply as to demand and get any price they want.

"Of course, we all - as consumers - would like to pay less for food. But if we stop to think, we all must realize that modest food costs will not-cannot - be assured if farmers continue to be underpaid.

"I'm sure consumers are willing to pay a little more for food now to avoid paying a lot more in the future."

Four Killed in Plane Crash

MARSHALL, Mo. AP - Four persons were killed Monday in a light plane that crashed into a fog-obscured television tower while they were on their way to the Indianapolis automobile race.

The victims, all from the Kansas City area, were Donald L. Hainworth, 40; his son, Jack, 15; Clarence Goodrich, 45, and Thomas L. Potter, 18. The elder Hainworth held a flight instructor's license.

The plane plowed into the 540-foot tower two miles north of Marshall. The tower is part of a cable television system serving the city.

Chester Griffitt, 52, who lives a half-mile from the scene, said drizzling rain and fog hid the two upper warning lights on the tower and the plane hit it about 450 feet from the ground.

"I heard the engine speed up as if the pilot saw the tower and tried to get away from it," Griffitt said. "But a wing hit the tower and the plane spun around and crashed about 100 yards away."

The upper sections of the tower toppled to the ground.

The coroner, Dr. B. F. Knipschild, said the victims died instantly.

TEACH ME TO PRAY

OFTEN within a morning hour
Or when the twilight time was blue,
They heard Him pray and felt such power,
Such dedication flowing through
His words that one faith-gloried day
They said, "Teach us to pray."

Oh, that your witnessing and mine
May show such victory and light,
Such fellowship with the Divine
That someone longing for the bright,
Transforming peace of God will say,
"Teach me to pray."

Wonder of All Wonders

IF YOU were about to be cast adrift at sea, and to end up on a desert island, what books would you take?

Well, I find myself cast adrift for six weeks with little "favorite reading material" and my religious library consisting of a Gospel according to St. John and a Salvation Army songbook.

At home there would be the whole Bible in several translations, commentaries and other reference books, current religious magazines and newspapers -- far, far too much.

One has actually to go no farter than the beginning of the Gospel of St. John to find the truth and good news of Christ expressed concisely, tersely and clearly.

"In the beginning was the Word . . . and the Word was God . . . and the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us . . . full of grace and truth."

And now the centuries have passed and we can say, "The Word was made flesh and dwells among us, full of grace and truth."

The remarkable thing about this extraordinary happening is that it is no respecter of persons. The Word may become incarnate in the body of a village carpenter, a fisherman, a doctor, a scrubwoman, a young graduate nurse -- anyone who elects to become a member of Christ's family.

And His incarnation is at once evident, not by any words, or profession or vocal witness, but by the aura of grace which surround such a life and by the truth which shines through it.

These words continue to come from the narrowed focus of hospital life.

So when I think of the Word made flesh, I think of those near to me here -- those who share for a little while this experience of sickness, of pain, of recovery or of death.

Right now it is late at night. My newly arrived roommate is a very ill woman. By day she chooses not to know how ill she is, but at night the guards of her mind go off duty and the horrors of the night rush in upon her soul.

It was very bad last night. She fought to escape "commitment to the earth."

The West Indian nurse abandoned her professional training in one swift, decisive transition.

"Are you a Christian, Mrs. Ryan?"

"Yes, I am."

"You believe in God?"

"Yes, I do."

"You believe God loves you and is concerned with what happens to you?"

"I have tried to believe that . . ."

"Well, now is the time for you to prove that you do believe what you have said in church. God does care, God is here, and He can now do for you what you can't do for yourself. So lie back, Mrs. Ryan, and just rest in His love."

And mysteriously, gently, yet in great strength, God's grace and truth were present in that room -- available through the Word made flesh in one of His loving children, and rest and sleep came to a tortured soul.

Sister Rebecca is old, just how old nobody knows -- but she must be well over 80. Once she held a high administrative position in the hospital; now she serves wherever there is a need.

Her special grace is to see what needs to be done within the scope of her powers. To notice a drooping plant and come with water. To look in a room and see a discouraged, downcast patient, and to know exactly the right word to say. To be able to convey to the sick, without exactly putting it in so many words, that God's grace is not confined within the sacred elements and that His presence may reach those who need it.

Day by day, hour by hour, in delightfully surprising ways we see the miracle of miracles occur, the wonder of wonders fulfilled -- the Word made flesh and dwelling in our very midst, full of grace and radiant in truth.

Food Costs: Excellent Now, But Outlook Is For Change, Freeman Says

Consumers, says Secretary of griculture Orville L. Freeman, never had it so good. But, e warns, it may not continue hat way.

At a recent meeting with editors and writers of consumer-riented publications, Secretary Freeman pointed out that onsumers are enjoying an ever-iminishing demand on their ake-home pay for food.

Consumers now spend only bout 18 percent of their take-ome pay for food. Ten years go it took nearly 21 percent o feed a family. Twenty years go one-fourth of a paycheck ent for food.

If the percentage of take-home ay were the same today as was in 1947 (25 percent), it ould cost a family of four bout $780 more for food in a ear.

Another way of looking at the onsumer's unmatched purchas-ng power is to consider how ong it takes to earn enough oney to purchase a week's ood needs.

In just one 8-hour day, a worker can earn enough to buy food for his family for a week. Twenty years ago it took 13 hours of work.

Interestingly, diets have improved and Americans are eating more. . . despite this decrease in cost. In the last 10 years, food consumption per capita has increased 2-1/2 percent. A larger percentage of quality foods are being consumed now than ever before, too.

The problem is, Secretary Freeman points out, that farmers are not getting a fair share of today's economy.

Admittedly food prices are higher than they were 20 years ago, but food prices and farm prices are completely different things.

Farm prices - the prices paid to farmers for their products on the farm - are 5 to 7 percent lower than 20 years ago. What's more, the farmers' portion of each dollar spent on food in the store is less today than in 1947.

Essentially farmers are earning two-thirds of what non-farmers earn. Yet they are producing a great abundance of quality food at modest retail prices. One farm worker today can provide the food and fiber needs of about 40 people; 10 years ago he could supply only 23 people.

Freeman warns that farm prices that are "ironically and incongruously low in today's otherwise booming economy" could destroy the family farm system that has brought the consumer such a modestly-priced, nutritious food abundance.

"Consumers must realize," he continued, "that if farm prices are not strengthened, the nation's family farm system could be replaced by corporate operations that conceivably could so control food supply as to demand and get any price they want.

"Of course, we all - as consumers - would like to pay less for food. But if we stop to think, we all must realize that modest food costs will not-cannot - be assured if farmers continue to be underpaid.

"I'm sure consumers are willing to pay a little more for food now to avoid paying a lot more in the future."

TEACH ME TO PRAY

OFTEN within a morning hour
Or when the twilight time was blue,
They heard Him pray and felt such power,
Such dedication flowing through
His words that one faith-gloried day
They said, "Teach us to pray."

Oh, that your witnessing and mine
May show such victory and light,
Such fellowship with the Divine
That someone longing for the bright,
Transforming peace of God will say,
"Teach me to pray."

Stock Market Cycles Risky to Follow

NEW YORK (AP) — The proud boast so often heard that the war in Vietnam is one that the nation's huge economy can accommodate with little effort is being shown more and more today to be highly inflated with air.

It is a small war relative to a big economy, but it is having its effect.

Vietnam will cost something more than $22 billion this coming fiscal year, less than 3 per cent of the gross national product of about $765 billion. But this financially "easy" war contributed to inflation last year and it might force a general tax hike this year. That is impact.

The budget deficit, it now appears, will top any previous deficit, totaling perhaps $30 billion, a good deal of it the result of the Vietnam war.

And, since the budget deficit will be potentially inflationary, pressure has increased for a cut in federal domestic spending. Parts of the Great Society, including the slogan, could become victims.

There is no question, therefore, that Vietnam is having its impact; no nation can afford such spending without consequences.

Vietnam is, however, only a fraction of our total commitment to military or defense spending. President Johnson's budget provides for $73 billion to be so spent, a figure that likely will swell.

Since projections for the gross national product, the total of a nation's goods and services, range from $740 billion to $790 billion for the year, defense spending still is likely to be no more at any time than about 10 per cent of GNP.

In the Korean War, when defense expenditures were lower, they represented a far higher percentage of gross national product, which then was about $265 billion. Again, although Vietnam is big in relation to Korea, it is smaller than Korea in relation to GNP.

It is this enormous size of the American production machine, many times larger than most other nations, that hides much of Vietnam's impact. But that impact is there. There is no debate about it.

What is still debatable is the extent of the pressure on the economy. Some critics of the administration maintain the pressure could have been lessened if the costs had been foreseen and arrangements made earlier for paying the bills.

It is possible that under perfect administering, and with a lot of luck, the impact could have been nearly hidden. This would have assumed more accurate projections of expenditures and better timing on fiscal measures meant to hold down inflation.

As it is, we have found that prices are higher than housewives are willing to pay and probably will go higher; interest rates are under upward pressure again after reaching 40-year highs last year; high mortgage rates are delaying a forecasted housing boom.

Perhaps as a consequence of tight money and rising rates, stock prices plunged last year and some blue chips remain depressed. The stock decline, in a limited sense, can therefore be blamed partly on Vietnam.

Some economists say, in defense of administration efforts, that the fact the economy still continues to support Americans in a manner that neither they nor any other people have ever before enjoyed is compliment enough to the administration's wisdom. Even in nonwar years, they say, we have had high taxes and interest, inflation and housing problems.

A big concern of the economists, however, is that should there be a further buildup in Vietnam—or another flareup in Korea or the Mideast—the rise in defense spending will corner more and more of the nation's productivity.

A war economy is a distant threat, but its consequences—as we have seen—sometimes are felt in advance.

An elderly lady, anxious to be approved for residence in a new retirement village, filled out the application with a bit of anxiety. She answered the questions on the state of her health and then signed her name and address. After zip, she wrote firmly: "Normal."

in one swift, decisive transition.

"Are you a Christian, Mrs. Ryan?"

"Yes, I am."

"You believe in God?"

"Yes, I do."

"You believe God loves you and is concerned with what happens to you?"

"I have tried to believe that . . ."

"Well, now is the time for you to prove that you do believe what you have said in church. God does care, God is here, and He can now do for you what you can't do for yourself. So lie back, Mrs. Ryan, and just rest in His love."

And mysteriously, gently, yet in great strength, God's grace and truth were present in that room -- available through the Word made flesh in one of His loving children, and rest and sleep came to a tortured soul.

Sister Rebecca is old, just how old nobody knows -- but she must be well over 80. Once she held a high administrative position in the hospital; now she serves wherever there is a need.

Her special grace is to see what needs to be done within the scope of her powers. To notice a drooping plant and come with water. To look in a room and see a discouraged, downcast patient, and to know exactly the right word to say. To be able to convey to the sick, without exactly putting it in so many words, that God's grace is not confined within the sacred elements and that His presence may reach those who need it.

Day by day, hour by hour, in delightfully surprising ways we see the miracle of miracles occur, the wonder of wonders fulfilled -- the Word made flesh and dwelling in our very midst, full of grace and radiant in truth.

TV Information Center Does Booming Business

By GENE HANDSAKER

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The telephones in Kellam deForest's office rang busily.

"Gunsmoke" wanted to know: Could an Indian testify at a court trial in Kansas in 1875? He could.

"I Spy" asked: How is milk delivered to hotels in Morrocco? Answer: in big cans, as in America.

DeForest, 40, wiry and intense, a distant cousin of the late inventor Dr. Lee deForest, is a fast fact-finder to the television industry. He is also a professional nit-picker who finds flaws in scripts.

A "Star Trek" scenario discovered a planet without variations in surface temparature. In a seven-page analysis finding 52 points technical- minded viewers might challenge in this script alone, deForest reported: "A planet without variations in surface temperature is impossible."

With two woman assistants, deForest, a former Yale history major, operates in what used to be the RKO Studio library, now part of the Desilu TV empire.

Five thousand reference books range from "Games and Songs of American Children" to "Executions—Legal Ways of Death Throughout the World." Table and shelves are piled high with magazines, 80 file drawers contain photos of almost anything imaginable, and the 1910 Encyclopedia Brittanica gets more use than the current edition.

"I wanted to get into show business but found you can't get anywhere in this town without something to sell," says deForest, whose only competitors are the major movie studios' libraries. "With the rise of television, I could see there was going to be a need for this service."

Since 1951 he has served 38 TV series, the present dozen including "Get Smart," "Wild, Wild West," "Hogan's Heroes," "Big Valley" and Lucy. Charges are on a per-show or hourly basis.

The phones ring. Which college graduated the most U.S. presidents? Answer: Harvard—5. Who won the Kentucky Derby in 1916? George Smith. Who wrote "Rigoletto"?

"Verdi, in 1851," replied Mrs. Joan Pearce, one of deForest's assistants. The producer hummed a tune over the phone and asked her to identify it. "La Donna e Mobile," she said.

Part of deForest Research's service is ascertaining that characters in scripts don't bear real people's names, to forestall suits or simple embarrassment.

A character in the Navy-oriented "Star Trek" was to be "Adm. Westervliet." Said Mrs. Pearce: "We recommended a change because in the Navy today there is a Capt. Westervliet. We try to protect people who might get ribbed about it."

Another call. "Did children in the old West have toy balloons?"

"We'll have to work on that," said deForest.

EVERY 4TH NEW HOME HAS CENTRAL AIR CONDITIONING

One out of every four new homes being built today has central air conditioning, the Plumbing-Heating-Cooling Information Bureau reports.

One reason for this is the great increase in the cooling of "public" buildings such as stores, theaters and restaurants, as well as factories, offices and other places of employment. The American family is exposed to comfort cooling both at work and at play, and its members don't want to go home to a sweltering house.

Air conditioning enthusiasts point to health advantages too. Doctors often recommend it for hay fever and allergy sufferers and heart patients.

Half asleep, in the early hours of the morning, I stumbled to answer an insistent pounding at the door and was stunned to see my wife -- rain-soaked and tear-stained -- accompanied by an exasperated policeman who asked, "Do you know this dame, mister? She says she lives here." When I convinced him that she was my wife, he threw me a sympathic look and left.

I then realized that my wife was wearing an old trenchcoat over her nightgown and was clutching a flashlight. Finally, after tears and laughter ceased, she told me what had happened. "Trouble," our wayward cat, had not come home that night. When the patrolman discovered my wife, said worried spouse was searching the block, peering into bushes and under cars.

The officer's understandable suspicion of her character -- in view of her actions and attire -- was clinched when he asked her what she was up to.

Without thinking, she had blurted hysterically, "I'm looking for Trouble."

Economic Effects of Viet War Becoming Pronounced

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — Does the stock market have a consistent rather than erratic pattern of highs and lows, its high months and its low months, its periods of wild bulls and hibernating bears?

Any believer in cycles — and there are millions of them with millions of pieces of data to show millions of patterns — will answer positively. But not everyone believes in cycles.

Nevertheless, some evidence seems to have accumulated that there is a good chance the market will rise in January, April, July and October, the first months of the new quarters, barring any sharp drop in the general economy.

In between, in the months of February, March and May for instance, prices may remain weak or even slump.

Now, to state a stock market theory is to have it contradicted very shortly afterward, and there is no assurance that this one will have a long life. It does, though, seem to have as much validity as the hemline theory — that stock averages rise or fall with female hemlines — or the sun spot theories, or the myriad theories computed from averages.

There has never been an absence of such theories, for the inability to predict how the mass of stock-buying people will act is the common factor that makes stock forecasting the game and business it is and not the science its market letter writers strive for.

However, the tendency has been for many of these, once stated, to become so entwined in their own logic and developed to such an intricacy that they are just about unworkable. Not so the three-month cycle.

As stated by Philip A. Cavalier, senior analyst for a big brokerage house, the pattern has appeared fairly regularly and logically when not disturbed by extreme economic or political news.

The reason, he states, is that early in these months of January, April, July and October the majority of companies report their earnings for the previous three months. The government also reports on the general economy. Given a hard numerical report of performance, and not just another estimate or rumor, buyers come into the market.

Thereafter, as uncertainty develops during the next two months the buyers remain safely on the sidelines. With demand weak, prices fall.

If this reasoning is sound it provokes the thought that in buying on past news, rather than on some evidence of future gains, a lot of market theories seem to be contradicted. But this seeming contradiction is not quite that; the past is merely used as assurance of the future.

Uncertainty is the key word in understanding this interpretation of mass psychology. Buyers are uncertain of the future but, in having some proof of past performance, they are willing to gamble it will continue for another quarter at least.

Cigarette Causes Death of Boy

GOODFELLOW TERRACE, Mo. AP - A 17-year-old boy was burned to death Monday on a couch which St. Louis county police said was set afire by a cigarette.

Police identified the victim as Robert O. Trentmann, of Goodfellow Terrace, a St. Louis suburb.

Police reported the boy's parents were out of town and said the fire smoldered for a long time before breaking out in flames.

An American missionary and his family were returning from the former French Camerouns, West Africa. So that the children would not look conspicuous in homemade, native clothes, the mother outfitted them in the latest fashion from a mail - order catalogue. But they soon betrayed their background. As the family walked along a street in paris, a stopover on their homeward journey, the parents realized that everyone was staring at them. Turning around, they discovered that the two little ones who trailed behind were casually walking along, carrying their suitcases on their heads.

Coffee Corner
by Cheri

Well, summer's here and I'm gonna play by golly - as soon as I get all my work done, that is. Every year early in the spring it seems like I break my neck to get the yard in order, the house cleaning done, the check-ups with the doctor and dentist over, the clothes all fitted and in order, and then I invariably sit down and say, "Now it's time to relax and play." Does it happen??? You can bet your botton dollar it doesn't! I've always failed to think of little items like the mumps or chicken pox, (my two always have their diseases in the summer, and never at the same time. We always manage to drag one ailment out for at least a month). Therefore, one month shot to pieces! Then, someone always calls me for a committee of some sort and while I'm frantically stammering around trying to think of a plausible excuse for not helping out, they've put my name down on their little black list, hung up the phone, and the next thing I know I'm attending a meeting to find out what my job is!

Then, ye ole conscience begins to bother me, and I think of all the parties we've been invited to during the winter and of how nice summer is for entertaining a few people, and I half-heartedly mention this to Charles, and the next thing I know, I'm having 50 people over for dinner and games. And, of course, the children, particularly Lee, who has a summer birthday, have really got their nose out of joint until I make it a point to entertain for them. Thus, the vacation is three-fourths over and I haven't relaxed yet and am not about to, as by now the flower beds and yard have gone weed-berserk and need a good cleaning and it takes at least another week to get that in order and then, I've tracked enough dirt and grass in from the yard I need to spend several days cleaning house again. And just when I think I'll sit down someone calls about a fall committee for something or other, it's time to get the boys school clothes bought and altered, and good grief - when do I get around to relaxing? A typical example of my summer fun - example, last year I told myself I was not going to let anything interfere, but was going to play golf and really get trim and tan - total time on course - four. I was going to swim every morning - total time at pool - 15. See what I mean, it's a losing battle, but you just wait - this year I've already done the cleaning, and the yard work, we've been to the doctor and the dentist, I'm not going to mention any parties to Charles, and I bet I get to sit down this summer starting right now!

Starting in just a minute, first of all I'd best check that scratchy throat Brete just came in complaining about, and oh, brother, there goes the telephone!

Hearnes Rules Out Interest In Third Party

GREENVILLE, S. C. (AP) -- Gov. Warren E. Hearnes Monday ruled out any chance of his entering into a third political party with the idea of ousting President Lyndon B. Johnson.

The governor made his remarks in a speech prepared for the Democratic governors' $100 a-plate dinner here.

He said he believes the president has "made increasing efforts to listen to and understand" the problems of state government since the governors' meeting at White Sulpher Springs, W. Va. last year.

A longtime critic of the Johnson administration, Hearnes said, "I feel today, more than ever before, that President Johnson is willing to discuss our mutual federal-state problems, and I am confident that we are working toward our desired goal of true partnership between state capitals and Washington."

In a remark obviously aimed at the presidential aspirations of George Wallace, former governor of Alabama, Hearnes said:

"I do not intend to withdraw from the Democratic party on this issue, or any other ... One of the greatest mistakes we can make when a battle is lost is to withdraw and be merely a critic, or join a splinter group chipped from the solid structure that has withstood wars, depressions and severe crises of every kind.

"If we lose a battle, let us not desert, but continue the fight as participants in the unending and larger conflict."

Wallace has indicated he might lead a third party in his 1968 presidential bid.

I love criticism, just so long as it's unqualified praise.

Mideast Crisis Has Multitude of Issues

By JAMES MARLOW
AP News Analyst

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Middle East is a can of worms, and not nice ones. It's now a mixture of hate, religious prejudice, face-saving, egotism, throne-saving, legalisms, and probably dirty tricks not yet discovered.

The ill will between Jordan's King Hussein, who got a lot of help from the United States, and Egypt's President Gamal Abdel Nasser, who got a lot of help from the Soviet Union, was so intense that on May 2 Nasser called Hussein a stooge for the American CIA.

Tuesday Nasser called him brother after Hussein traveled to Cairo to sign a mutual defense pact with him against Israel.

Hussein probably did it because he was afraid he'd lose his throne if he didn't since his Jordanians are hopping with hatred for the Israelis and full of steam for Nasser, who forced a showdown with Israel.

This was fairly typical for Nasser. Since his humiliation by the Israeli-British-French attack on Egypt in 1956, Nasser has been pretty mousy and lost prestige with the other Arab leaders.

But now, since he is in this critical situation with Israel, they have felt it necessary to rally around him, some of them probably for the same reason as Hussein's. Nasser's ego needed something like this, even within his own country, where the economy is bad and complaints were growing.

Although the Jews and the Moslem Arabs who surround them are all Semites, it's their religion which separates them. The Arabs have vowed unrelenting enmity since the Israelis set up their government in the middle of the Arab world in 1948.

Meanwhile, Moscow is giving a classic example of temperamental politics, a repeat performance.

Immediately after North Korea invaded South Korea in 1950, the U.N. Security Council went into session and passed a resolution calling for a cease-fire. This paved the way for the United States to get into the war with U.N. approval.

The Soviets might have blocked the council action then — if it had only been there. But it had been boycotting the council for months because Nationalist China was represented on the council and Moscow insisted that the newly created Red China should have the seat.

Now comes the Mideast crisis, and until Thursday, the first of June, the Nationalist Chinese delegate is the council president, a job which rotates among the 15 council members.

Although things have changed since 1950, and the Soviets and Red Chinese now are bitter enemies, Moscow still insists Red China should have Nationalist China's seat. This time the United States is urging fast action by the council to preserve peace in the Mideast. The hope is that all 15 members will approve some kind of cease-and-desist resolution.

But diplomatic sources say any agreement like that is unlikely to include the Soviet Union so long as Nationalist China has the presidency.

And Nasser, who made the Mideast crisis totally critical by banning Israeli shipping from the Gulf of Aqaba, an action President Johnson calls illegal, has tangled the crisis in legalisms.

Egypt had barred Israeli shipping from the gulf from 1948 until the war of 1956. Since then Israel has depended on U.N. peacekeeping forces in Egypt to keep the gulf open. But Nasser this month told the U.N. troops to get out and they did. Now Nasser says he wants things to be as they were before 1956—meaning Israeli shipping banned from the gulf.

And the crisis might not be half as bad as it is if Israel itself had not refused to let the U.N. peacekeeping force operate inside its territory. Nasser did and, because he did, he could order the U.N. troops out whenever he wished.

And nobody knows yet whether Moscow, which says it backs Nasser, cooked this up with him as a double deal: to let him regain prestige and try to force the United States, if it wants Mideast peace, to make concessions on Vietnam.

Ragan Tells Plans for New Clinic

The Sikeston area unit of the Association for retarded children met Thursday evening in the fellowship hall of the First Christian church.

The business meeting was conducted by Roy Marks, vice president.

David Ragan, administrator of the mental health clinic, spoke. He said that region IX, the eight-county area to be served by the clinic, has a population of 177,270 with 5,319 mentally retarded. Of this number, only 1,087 are receiving services in education and training.

The clinic will fill a need for diagnostic and evaluation services and specialized day care programs for those not eligible for training centers and public school special education classes.

Ragan told the group that the clinic would be in operation five days a week with a nursing staff on duty seven days a week. For in-patient beds are included in the clinic for those whose diagnosis may take a long time, who need specialized help or who are being referred to the child's development center of the University of Missouri or to Cardinal Glennon Children's center in St. Louis.

The beds will also be used in case of an emergency in the patient's family or by court order. The 40-patient day care center will operate five days a week and will not conflict with any community programs now in effect. Ragan said he hoped there would be volunteers to work in the day care center. A question period followed.

Refreshments were served.

The next meeting will be June 22.

DREW PEARSON AND JACK ANDERSON SAY:

Prima Donna from Oregon guts education bill; male members of house must learn to pamper lady member from Oregon; Justice Department sits on big pipeline antitrust case.

WASHINGTON -- After a torn and tattered aid-to-education bill finally emerged from a 2 a.m. house debate, it was remarked in the democratic cloackroom that the administration could have won had it not been for the change in life of Edith Green.

They were referring to the fact that the Oregon democrat had deserted the democratic party and teamed up with the Dixiecrats and Republicans in gutting her own committee's bill.

More and more over the years, Mrs. Green has become one of the unexplained mysteries of Washington politics. A highly intelligent, able woman in her late fifties with long experience in government, Mrs. Green now takes a conspiratorial view of the world. She thinks everyone is ganging up against her -- except in recent weeks the Republicans and Dixiecrats.

She engaged in a running duel with the other lady from Oregon, Sen. Maurine Neuberger, until the latter retired. She has been scarcely speaking to Sen. Wayne Morse, another Oregon democrat, who has campaigned for her reelection in the past.

There was a time when Mrs. Green was a great admirer of Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, former chairman of her education and labor committee. Some colleagues wisecracked that there was romance between them. Undoubtedly Adam knew how to handle the "Gentlelady from Oregon" better than the present chairman, courtly Kentuckian Carl Perkins. He knew how to crack down on Edith. Once when she broke her word to him he promptly fired her sister from the committee payroll.

--PERSONAL PRIDE--

Once factor which contributed to the gutted condition of the aid-to-education bill was committee seniority. Thanks to seniority, Rep. Roman Pucinski of Chicago inherited the subcommittee on public school education.

But, because he had not served on the subcommittee before, the main job of piloting the bill through the house was given to Rep. John Brademas of South Bend, Ind., who ranked second. Brademas is one of the ablest members of the committee. But he did not defer to Mrs. Green.

On a previous occasion Esther Peterson, assistant secretary of labor, asked Rep. Frank Thompson, D-N.J., to introduce a bill for equal pay for women. Thompson suggested that since Mrs. Green had long pioneered for women's economic rights, she handle the bill. But Mrs. Green, at that time, felt the bill did not represent her views. She declined.)

Thompson then proceeded to hold hearings, put the bill in final shape and get full committee approval. In doing so he announced: "I suggest that this bill is something the gentlelady from Oregon might well handle on the floor of the house."

Mrs. Green accepted the invitation, introduced the bill as her own and piloted it through the house of representatives with flying colors. She made no mention of the fact that Thompson of New Jersey had done all the work.

Had Messrs. Perkins, Pucinski and Brademas given Mrs. Green the job of floor-managing the education bill last week, the outcome probably would have been different.

SUPPRESSED PIPELINE CASE

New Attorney General Ramsey Clark, who is following his daddy's vigorous trustbusting career, doesn't know that there is an important antitrust case gathering dust in his files.

It involves the biggest liquid petroleum pipeline in the world--Colonial - running from Texas through the south up through Virginia to New Jersey, a total of 1540 miles. Night and day it pulsates millions of gallons of oil through its line -- 30 to 36 inches in diameter.

The Colonial pipeline company, with assets of $371 million, is owned by Sinclair, Cities Service, Gulf, Union of California, Continental, Texaco, Socony Mobil, American and Phillips. So far it seems able to thumb its nose at Washington.

In April, 1963, the justice department antitrust division sent Colonial a demand for documents and records dealing with the charge that other oil companies, not as mighty as the above giants, were not able to run their oil through this pipeline. For an oil pipeline is a private transport system which any company is entitled to use, just as any company is entitled to ship over a railroad.

Despite this, antitrust experts have obtained evidence that Colonial is in a private conspiracy to keep its line for the use only of its nine owners--barring particularly the small independents.

After a delay of three years, there still remains no action. Assistant Attorney General Donald Turner, a charming but complacent antitruster, has been sitting on the case despite needling from down below.

Meanwhile federal prosecutors away from Washington have been more active. This past February 23, a federal grand jury in Newark, N.J., indicted three top executives of Colonial pipeline on charges of bribing the mayor and council president of Woodbridge, N.J., to get permission to build a pipeline through a nearby area.

The Colonial pipeline officials who were indicated included Karl Feldman, executive vice president, and Glenn H. Giles, vice president for operations. When residents of Woodbridge objected to having a pipeline and storage tanks built close to them, Colonial executives simply bribed city officials, according to the grand jury indictment.

New Attorney General Ramsey Clark might well ask his subordinates to dust off his Colonial pipeline files.

Note: Justice Tom Clark Ramsey's father, recently handed down one of the toughest pipeline opinions in supreme court history regarding El Paso Natural Gas. Both Tom and Ramsey are from Texas.

A little girl was telling a friend about her stay at summer camp. "The first day I didn't have hardly any friends," she said. "The second day I had a few friends. The third day I had friends and enemies."

DREW PEARSON AND JACK ANDERSON SAY:

Prima Donna from Oregon guts education bill; male members of house must learn to pamper lady member from Oregon; Justice Department sits on big pipeline antitrust case.

WASHINGTON -- After a torn and tattered aid-to-education bill finally emerged from a 2 a.m. house debate, it was remarked in the democratic cloakroom that the administration could have won had it not been for the change in life of Edith Green.

They were referring to the fact that the Oregon democrat had deserted the democratic party and teamed up with the Dixiecrats and Republicans in gutting her own committee's bill.

More and more over the years, Mrs. Green has become one of the unexplained mysteries of Washington politics. A highly intelligent, able woman in her late fifties with long experience in government, Mrs. Green now takes a conspiratorial view of the world. She thinks everyone is ganging up against her -- except in recent weeks the Republicans and Dixiecrats.

She engaged in a running duel with the other lady from Oregon, Sen. Maurine Neuberger, until the latter retired. She has been scarcely speaking to Sen. Wayne Morse, another Oregon democrat, who has campaigned for her reelection in the past.

There was a time when Mrs. Green was a great admirer of Rep. Adam Clayton Powell, former chairman of her education and labor committee. Some colleagues wisecracked that there was romance between them. Undoubtedly Adam knew how to handle the "Gentle lady from Oregon" better than the present chairman, courtly Kentuckian Carl Perkins. He knew how to crack down on Edith. Once when she broke her word to him he promptly fired her sister from the committee payroll.

Coffee Corner

by Cheri

Well, summer's here and I'm gonna play by golly - as soon as I get all my work done, that is. Every year early in the spring it seems like I break my neck to get the yard in order, the house cleaning done, the check-ups with the doctor and dentist over, the clothes all fitted and in order, and then I invariably sit down and say, "Now it's time to relax and play." Does it happen??? You can bet your botton dollar it doesn't! I've always failed to think of little items like the mumps or chicken pox, (my two always have their diseases in the summer, and never at the same time. We always manage to drag one ailment out for at least a month). Therefore, one month shot to pieces! Then, someone always calls me for a committee of some sort and while I'm frantically stammering around trying to think of a plausible excuse for not helping out, they've put my name down on their little black list, hung up the phone, and the next thing I know I'm attending a meeting to find out what my job is!

Then, ye ole conscience begins to bother me, and I think of all the parties we've been invited to during the winter and of how nice summer is for entertaining a few people, and I half-heartedly mention this to Charles, and the next thing I know, I'm having 50 people over for dinner and games. And, of course, the children, particularly Lee, who has a summer birthday, have really got their nose out of joint until I make it a point to entertain for them. Thus, the vacation is three-fourths over and I haven't relaxed yet and am not about to, as by now the flower beds and yard have gone weed-berserk and need a good cleaning and it takes at least another week to get that in order and then, I've tracked enough dirt and grass in from the yard I need to spend several days cleaning house again. And just when I think I'll sit down someone calls about a fall committee for something or other, it's time to get the boys school clothes bought and altered, and good grief - when do I get around to relaxing? A typical example of my summer fun - example, last year I told myself I was not going to let anything interfere, but was going to play golf and really get trim and tan - total time on course - four. I was going to swim every morning - total time at pool - 15. See what I mean, it's a losing battle, but you just wait - this year I've already done the cleaning, and the yard work, we've been to the doctor and the dentist, I'm not going to mention any parties to Charles, and I bet I get to sit down this summer starting right now!

Starting in just a minute, first of all I'd best check that scratchy throat Brete just came in complaining about, and oh, brother, there goes the telephone!

Hearnes Rules Out Interest In Third Party

GREENVILLE, S. C. (AP) -- Gov. Warren E. Hearnes Monday ruled out any chance of his entering into a third political party with the idea of ousting President Lyndon B. Johnson.

The governor made his remarks in a speech prepared for the Democratic governors' $100 a-plate dinner here.

He said he believes the president has "made increasing efforts to listen to and understand" the problems of state government since the governors' meeting at White Sulpher Springs, W. Va. last year.

A longtime critic of the Johnson administration, Hearnes said, "I feel today, more than ever before, that President Johnson is willing to discuss our mutual federal-state problems, and I am confident that we are working toward our desired goal of true partnership between state capitals and Washington."

In a remark obviously aimed at the presidential aspirations of George Wallace, former governor of Alabama, Hearnes said:

"I do not intend to withdraw from the Democratic party on this issue, or any other ... One of the greatest mistakes we can make when a battle is lost is to withdraw and be merely a critic, or join a splinter group chipped from the solid structure that has withstood wars, depressions and severe crises of every kind.

"If we lose a battle, let us not desert, but continue the fight as participants in the unending and larger conflict."

Wallace has indicated he might lead a third party in his 1968 presidential bid.

I love criticism, just so long as it's unqualified praise.

Mideast Crisis Has Multitude of Issues

By JAMES MARLOW
AP News Analyst

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Middle East is a can of worms, and not nice ones. It's now a mixture of hate, religious prejudice, face-saving, egotism, throne-saving, legalisms, and probably dirty tricks not yet discovered.

The ill will between Jordan's King Hussein, who got a lot of help from the United States, and Egypt's President Gamal Abdel Nasser, who got a lot of help from the Soviet Union, was so intense that on May 2 Nasser called Hussein a stooge for the American CIA.

Tuesday Nasser called him brother after Hussein traveled to Cairo to sign a mutual defense pact with him against Israel.

Hussein probably did it because he was afraid he'd lose his throne if he didn't since his Jordanians are hopping with hatred for the Israelis and full of steam for Nasser, who forced a showdown with Israel.

This was fairly typical for Nasser. Since his humiliation by the Israeli-British-French attack on Egypt in 1956, Nasser has been pretty mousy and lost prestige with the other Arab leaders.

But now, since he is in this critical situation with Israel, they have felt it necessary to rally around him, some of them probably for the same reason as Hussein's. Nasser's ego needed something like this, even within his own country, where the economy is bad and complaints were growing.

Although the Jews and the Moslem Arabs who surround them are all Semites, it's their religion which separates them. The Arabs have vowed unrelenting enmity since the Israelis set up their government in the middle of the Arab world in 1948.

Meanwhile, Moscow is giving a classic example of temperamental politics, a repeat performance.

Immediately after North Korea invaded South Korea in 1950, the U.N. Security Council went into session and passed a resolution calling for a cease-fire. This paved the way for the United States to get into the war with U.N. approval.

The Soviets might have blocked the council action then — if it had only been there. But it had been boycotting the council for months because Nationalist China was represented on the council and Moscow insisted that the newly created Red China should have the seat.

Now comes the Mideast crisis, and until Thursday, the first of June, the Nationalist Chinese delegate is the council president, a job which rotates among the 15 council members.

Although things have changed since 1950, and the Soviets and Red Chinese now are bitter enemies, Moscow still insists Red China should have Nationalist China's seat. This time the United States is urging fast action by the council to preserve peace in the Mideast. The hope is that all 15 members will approve some kind of cease-and-desist resolution.

But diplomatic sources say any agreement like that is unlikely to include the Soviet Union so long as Nationalist China has the presidency.

And Nasser, who made the Mideast crisis totally critical by banning Israeli shipping from the Gulf of Aqaba, an action President Johnson calls illegal, has tangled the crisis in legalisms.

Egypt had barred Israeli shipping from the gulf from 1948 until the war of 1956. Since then Israel has depended on U.N. peacekeeping forces in Egypt to keep the gulf open. But Nasser this month told the U.N. troops to get out and they did. Now Nasser says he wants things to be as they were before 1956—meaning Israeli shipping banned from the gulf.

And the crisis might not be half as bad as it is if Israel itself had not refused to let the U.N. peacekeeping force operate inside its territory. Nasser did and, because he did, he could order the U.N. troops out when he wished.

And nobody knows yet whether Moscow, which says it backs Nasser, cooked this up with him as a double deal: to let him regain prestige and try to force the United States, if it wants Mideast peace, to make concessions on Vietnam.

Ragan Tells Plans for New Clinic

The Sikeston area unit of the Association for retarded children met Thursday evening in the fellowship hall of the First Christian church.

The business meeting was conducted by Roy Marks, vice president.

David Ragan, administrator of the mental health clinic, spoke. He said that region IX, the eight-county area to be served by the clinic, has a population of 177,270 with 5,319 mentally retarded. Of this number, only 1,087 are receiving services in education and training.

The clinic will fill a need for diagnostic and evaluation services and specialized day care programs for those not eligible for training centers and public school special education classes.

Ragan told the group that the clinic would be in operation five days a week with a nursing staff on duty seven days a week. Forty in-patient beds are included in the clinic for those whose diagnosis may take a long time, who need specialized help or who are being referred to the child's development center of the University of Missouri or to Cardinal Glennon Children's center in St. Louis.

The beds will also be used in case of an emergency in the patient's family or by court order. The 40-patient day care center will operate five days a week and will not conflict with any community programs now in effect. Ragan said he hoped there would be volunteers to work in the day care center. A question period followed.

Refreshments were served.

The next meeting will be June 22.

The United Nations- Myth vs. Reality

The UN's Security Council, its General Assembly and the Secretariat are the three major organs of the world organization which have been consistently in the world political limelight. Less known are the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council and International Court of Justice. There are also a number of commissions and specialized agencies which deal with everything from the status of women, human rights and narcotics to education (UNESCO), labor (ILO), and health (WHO), to mention a few. All in all, there are 13 specialized agencies whose work is coordinated through the Economic and Social Council. While some of the work of these specialized agencies has merit and is needed for smooth functioning of international relations, there are others which have been strongly criticized. One such is UNESCO and many of its activities in the educational field. Even the most ardent UN supporter might have difficulty denying that some of the specialized agencies deal with matters and aspects of daily political, economic and cultural life which are generally left to the individual in a free and open society such as our own.

The UN Charter assigned to the Security Council the primary responsibility "for the maintenance of international peace and security" in the post - war world --the most important political function of the world organization. Membership in the Council was limited to 11 nations -- five permanent members and six rotating members elected for two-year terms by the General Assembly. To preserve the wartime alliance of the "Big Five" as a controlling factor in the world organization, the five permanent Security Council seats were assigned to China, France, Soviet Russia, the United Kingdom and the United States. The current (1964) nonpermanent members are Bolivia, Czechoslovakia, Brazil, Ivory Coast, Norway and Morocco.

As constituted, each member of the Security Council - permanent or nonpermanent - had one vote. The "Big Five" had to vote unanimously to carry an issue before the Council involving other than procedural matters. In effect, dissent by one of the big powers could block action of the Council, regardless of whether such action was good, bad or indifferent from the point of view of the United States or all other member nations. It remains a moot question whether majority rule according to accepted parliarmentary procedures could have strengthened the position of the Council.

In the atmosphere of sweetness and light that intoxicated many of our politicians and press during those victorious post-war days, it was mighty unpopular to suggest that this arrangement might actually cripple the world organization, especially if the veto power was exercised in bad faith and for ulterior motives. The creators of the UN ignored such pessimism; they had high hopes that the "Big Five" would rule jointly -- and benevolently --over a peaceful world marching toward a distant goal which, if the words of some of the more ardent supporters of the UN idea were to be believed, would lead to some kind of a paradise on earth. The intentions of the Soviets did not fit at all into this cheerful picture. As soon became apparent, Marshal Stalin had no intention of cooperating with the Western Allies. Once they had saved him and his dictatorship from destruction by Hitler, Stalin again set his sights on the overall communist objective -- an objective unchanged since the establishment of the world communist movement; the conquest of the world in the names of Marx and Lenin.

The failure of the Security Council to fulfill its function is a matter of record. The first veto was cast on February 16, 1946 by the Soviets only a few months after the San Francisco conference. The issue involved negotiations for the withdrawal of British and French troops from Lebanon and Syria. By the end of 1946, the Soviets had used the veto nine times to one Western veto, cast by France. Through 1949, the veto power had been used 45 times -- twice by France and 43 times by Russia. The record did not improve during the 'fifties and the early 'sixties. By the end of 1961, more than 100 voters had been cast - four by France, two each by Great Britain and China, and the rest, more than 90 percent of the total, by the Soviet Union. For all practical purposes, the Soviet Union had succeeded in rendering the Security Council impotent. The veto power had been used by the Soviets to prevent and postpone the admission of new members to the UN if they were of Western orientation, to hamstring early proposals concerning arms reductions, to prevent a probe of the Berlin Blockade, to table the combined British - French resolution on Suez and to stop the resolution proposed by the United States on the anti - communist uprising in Hungary, to mention only a handful of issues.

The indiscriminate application of the veto power had seriously hampered the Security Council in the performance of its assigned function. Its hands had been tied when ever the Soviet Union felt that an issue under consideration would (a) be potentially harmful to the interests of the world communist movement or, (b) strengthen or advance the cause of the western alliance.

By 1950, the United Nations had become one of the battlegrounds of the Cold War. In Europe, the allies were struggling to maintain their position in Germany. In Asia, the Chinese mainland had fallen to the Reds by default. The North Korean army was preparing its attack upon the Republic of South Korea, with full Red Chinese and Soviet backing.

At the time of the North Korean attack, the Soviet Union was boycotting the Security Council in protest against the continued presence of the Nationalist Chinese government on Formosa. In the absence of the Soviet delegate, the Security Council approved the suggested American measures for the defense of South Korea against the Red invaders.

The so-called "police action" in Korea is still being hailed as one of the most spectacular achievements of the UN. But the United States bore the brunt of the fighting and lost 33,629 men killed in battle.

General Mark Clark, a distinguished and brave American soldier who served in Korea as UN Commander, considered the contribution of the other UN members to the war as "piddling." At no time did the troops of other UN members in Korea amount to 10% of the American force of 450,000 men at peak strength.

Even this small contribution of the UN, as well as its original endorsement of U.S. action, were possible only because of the absence of the delegate of the Soviet Union from the Security Council. Thus he could not cast his veto. The fact, established as early as 1950, was that the UN Security Council was incapable of stopping communist or communist - favored aggression. Events in the following years told the same story over and over again.

The United States then turned to the General Assembly to circumvent the abuse of the veto power. Pursuant to a proposal power. Pursuant to a proposal by Secretary of State Dean Acheson, the General Assembly of the UN adopted the so-called "Uniting for Peace" resolution in 1950. This resolution simply provided that in cases where the Security Council fails "to act on an apparent threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression because of a negative vote (veto) by any one of its five permanent members, the Assembly itself may take up the matter immediately . . ." if necessary in an emergency session.

Not surprisingly, the resolution was opposed by the Soviet Union and her satellites. But the words of the resolution -- "because of a negative vote by any one of its five permanent members" -- must be kept in mind. Thus, while aimed at Soviet abuses of the veto, the resolution also applied to the four other permanent Security Council members -- Great Britain, France, Free China and the United States -- if they resorted to the veto power.

The United Nations- Myth vs. Reality

The UN's Security Council, its General Assembly and the Secretariat are the three major organs of the world organization which have been consistently in the world political limelight. Less known are the Economic and Social Council, the Trusteeship Council and International Court of Justice. There are also a number of commissions and specialized agencies which deal with everything from the status of women, human rights and narcotics to education (UNESCO), labor (ILO), and health (WHO), to mention a few. All in all, there are 13 specialized agencies whose work is coordinated through the Economic and Social Council. While some of the work of these specialized agencies has merit and is needed for smooth functioning of international relations, there are others which have been strongly criticized. One such is UNESCO and many of its activities in the educational field. Even the most ardent UN supporter might have difficulty denying that some of the specialized agencies deal with matters and aspects of daily political, economic and cultural life which are generally left to the individual in a free and open society such as our own.

The UN Charter assigned to the Security Council the primary responsibility "for the maintenance of international peace and security" in the post - war world --the most important political function of the world organization. Membership in the Council was limited to 11 nations -- five permanent members and six rotating members elected for two-year terms by the General Assembly. To preserve the wartime alliance of the "Big Five" as a controlling factor in the world organization, the five permanent Security Council seats were assigned to China, France, Soviet Russia, the United Kingdom and the United States. The current (1964) nonpermanent members are Bolivia, Czechoslovakia, Brazil, Ivory Coast, Norway and Morocco.

As constituted, each member of the Security Council - permanent or nonpermanent - had one vote. The "Big Five" had to vote unanimously to carry an issue before the Council involving other than procedural matters. In effect, dissent by one of the big powers could block action of the Council, regardless of whether such action was good, bad or indifferent from the point of view of the United States or all other member nations. It remains a moot question whether majority rule according to accepted parliarmentary procedures could have strengthened the position of the Council.

In the atmosphere of sweetness and light that intoxicated many of our politicians and press during those victorious post-war days, it was mighty unpopular to suggest that this arrangement might actually cripple the world organization, especially if the veto power was exercised in bad faith and for ulterior motives. The creators of the UN ignored such pessimism; they had high hopes that the "Big Five" would rule jointly -- and benevolently --over a peaceful world marching toward a distant goal which, if the words of some of the more ardent supporters of the UN idea were to be believed, would lead to some kind of a paradise on earth. The intentions of the Soviets did not fit at all into this cheerful picture. As soon became apparent, Marshal Stalin had no intention of cooperating with the Western Allies. Once they had saved him and his dictatorship from destruction by Hitler, Stalin again set his sights on the overall communist objective -- an objective unchanged since the establishment of the world communist movement; the conquest of the world in the names of Marx and Lenin.

The failure of the Security Council to fulfill its function is a matter of record. The first veto was cast on February 16, 1946 by the Soviets only a few months after the San Francisco conference. The issue involved negotiations for the withdrawal of British and French troops from Lebanon and Syria. By the end of 1946, the Soviets had used the veto nine times to one Western veto, cast by France. Through 1949, the veto power had been used 45 times -- twice by France and 43 times by Russia. The record did not improve during the 'fifties and the early 'sixties. By the end of 1961, more than 100 voters had been cast - four by France, two each by Great Britain and China, and the rest, more than 90 percent of the total, by the Soviet Union. For all practical purposes, the Soviet Union had succeeded in rendering the Security Council impotent. The veto power had been used by the Soviets to prevent and postpone the admission of new members to the UN if they were of Western orientation, to hamstring early proposals concerning arms reductions, to prevent a probe of the Berlin Blockade, to table the combined British - French resolution on Suez and to stop the resolution proposed by the United States on the anti - communist uprising in Hungary, to mention only a handful of issues.

The indiscriminate application of the veto power had seriously hampered the Security Council in the performance of its assigned function. Its hands had been tied when ever the Soviet Union felt that an issue under consideration would (a) be potentially harmful to the interests of the world communist movement or, (b) strengthen or advance the cause of the western alliance.

By 1950, the United Nations had become one of the battlegrounds of the Cold War. In Europe, the allies were struggling to maintain their position in Germany. In Asia, the Chinese mainland had fallen to the Reds by default. The North Korean army was preparing its attack upon the Republic of South Korea, with full Red Chinese and Soviet backing.

At the time of the North Korean attack, the Soviet Union was boycotting the Security Council in protest against the continued presence of the Nationalist Chinese government on Formosa. In the absence of the Soviet delegate, the Security Council approved the suggested American measures for the defense of South Korea against the Red invaders.

The so-called "police action" in Korea is still being hailed as one of the most spectacular achievements of the UN. But the United States bore the brunt of the fighting and lost 33,629 men killed in battle.

General Mark Clark, a distinguished and brave American soldier who served in Korea as UN Commander, considered the contribution of the other UN members to the war as "piddling." At no time did the troops of other UN members in Korea amount to 10% of the American force of 450,000 men at peak strength.

Even this small contribution of the UN, as well as its original endorsement of U.S. action, were possible only because of the absence of the delegate of the Soviet Union from the Security Council. Thus he could not cast his veto. The fact, established as early as 1950, was that the UN Security Council was incapable of stopping communist or communist - favored aggression. Events in the following years told the same story over and over again.

The United States then turned to the General Assembly to circumvent the abuse of the veto power. Pursuant to a proposal power. Pursuant to a proposal by Secretary of State Dean Acheson, the General Assembly of the UN adopted the so-called "Uniting for Peace" resolution in 1950. This resolution simply provided that in cases where the Security Council fails "to act on an apparent threat to the peace, breach of the peace, or act of aggression because of a negative vote (veto) by any one of its five permanent members, the Assembly itself may take up the matter immediately . . ." if necessary in an emergency session.

Not surprisingly, the resolution was opposed by the Soviet Union and her satellites. But the words of the resolution -- "because of a negative vote by any one of its five permanent members" -- must be kept in mind. Thus, while aimed at Soviet abuses of the veto, the resolution also applied to the four other permanent Security Council members -- Great Britain, France, Free China and the United States -- if they resorted to the veto power.

ANN LANDERS
Answers Your Questions

Dear Ann Landers: I never dreamed I'd write to a newspaper columnist for help, but I can't find the answers alone anymore.

My husband and I are both college graduates. We have three handsome sons. I am ashamed to tell you, but my husband started to collect pornography during adolescence and he can't break the habit.

I have found dozens of obscene pictures and "toys" stuffed between the rafters in the attic, in shoe boxes, in silverware drawers, under the carpets and even in the trunk of his car. Every time I find something new I get sick to my stomach. It is almost as if he plants this junk around where I'm sure to run into it.

Whenever I confront him with a new discovery, he tells the most bizarre lies - insists someone is trying to frame him - that he never saw the stuff before. Then he breaks down and cries and promises he'll never do it again.

Yesterday our 12-year-old son found some pictures and asked me whose they were. I said I didn't know. Please tell me what to do about this problem before I crack up - CAN'T SIGN MY NAME

Dear Can't: Your husband's hang-up dates back to childhood and you must treat it as an illness, which it is most assuredly.

Stop registering shock, disappointment and anger. Tell your husband, calmly, that he must select one hiding place for his collection, that it must be kept locked, that you will keep one key and he will keep the other. Explain that when you find bits and pieces of his collection around you'll put it where it belongs. Then do and say nothing.

Part of your husband's sick kick is witnessing you over-react when you discover the junk. When you reduce your hysteria he'll probably be less interested in his collection.

Dear Ann Landers: My father and mother are divorced. My father has a lady friend and he spends whatever spare time he has with her. He really doesn't have much spare time, though, because he works two jobs, which add up to 16 hours a day.

My mother works a double shift and puts in 15 hours a day. I am just getting into my teens and it seems I have lots of problems and nobody to talk to. I can't call my mother at work because it's against the rules. My father doesn't want to hear from me about my troubles because he has already told me he has plenty of his own.

I have gone to my teachers so many times already I am ashamed to bother them anymore. I need some grown-up help. The future frightens me - LONESOME GIRL

Dear Girl: Don't be ashamed to continue to go to your teachers for counsel. Teachers can be wonderfully helpful and, thank heavens, there are many who want to help. And don't forget me, Toots. I'll listen any time you want to unload. That's what I'm here for.

Confidential to What Shall I Say?: Say NO and make it clear that nothing is going to happen until he comes up with a license. What he'd like, of course, is a learner's permit which is a very old story, my dear. Don't buy it.

If you have trouble getting along with your parents . . .if you can't get them to let you live your own life, send for Ann Landers' booklet, "Bugged By Parents? How to Get More Freedom." Send 50¢ in coin with your request and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

A FIVE DOLLAR BILL will be given to the person who can identify the largest number of pupils in this fourth grade picture. The teacher was Miss Effie Smith.

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE
BY Jack Strass L.L.D.

THE CASE OF THE DOGMA WITH A STIGMA

A state law was passed that authorized lost dogs to be used for scientific purposes. Naturally, this upset the vast populous of canine lovers who raced to court to attack the validity of the statute.

"A dog is an item of personal property," they argued vehemently. "You can't destroy a person's property just because it happens to get lost. It's not only unconstitutional as to the owner of the dog, it's unconsititutional to the dog also."

"Nonsense," answered the state's attorney. "The statute is absolutely legal. What's more, it's unquestionably better that a dog be used for science, for the betterment of humanity, than to permit it to roam the streets and become a menace. It's dogma that will just have to overcome the stigma."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you find that the statute violates the constitutional rights of dogs and/or their owners?

This is how the judge ruled: No! The judge held that, under the law, lost dogs properly treated as abandoned property, and, when abandoned, the owners no longer have any rights in the abandoned property.

As for the dogs, concluded the judge in effect, there is no such thing as a dog being deprived of its consititutional rights since, unlike people, they have none.

(Based upon a 1959 Mass. Supreme Judicial Court Decision.)

TODAY'S LEGAL POINTER

If you're dishonest, you will ultimately get caught. If you're not dishonest, basically you're going to lose a lot of sleep for having been dishonest. One way or the other, it pays to obey the law and to follow the straight and narrow.

(For personal guidance, see your local attorney)

Washington Report
Sen. Stuart Symington

MIDDLE EAST

It is clear that what we are accustomed to call the Free World, for some time threatened across the DMZ zone and the Ho Chi Minh Trails, now has further problems across the Straits of Tiran and the Gulf of Aqaba. The immediate cause is the blockade declared by President Nasser of Egypt.

Under the Tripartite Agreement of 1950 with Great Britain and France and the definite commitments made by Secretary of State Dulles with respect to keeping open the Straits of Tiran and their availability to the shipping of all nations, the United States at minimum has a moral obligation in the Middle East.

In view of our already heavy commitments in other parts of the world, it could indeed be a serious matter if the U.S. became involved unilaterally. It is vitally important, therefore, that we only act jointly with the two other signatories of the 1950 Tripartite Agreement; and best of all that we act, if possible, under the United Nations.

PURINA KOREA COMPANY

A Missouri company, Ralston Purine of St. Louis, will be the first United States firm to undertake the development of feed production and poultry raising in Korea. That country is not now self-sufficient in food production.

The Agency for International Development will insure one-half of the U.S. firm's investment of $102,000 in Purina Korea Co., a joint venture by Ralston Purina and Korean shareholders. AID will also issue an extended risk guarantee to cover 75% of a $500,000 U.S. commercial bank loan.

The Purina Korea Co. will construct and operate a feed mill, butchery, broiler processing plant and breeder and grow-out farms. During the first three years of operation, the project is expected to generate sales of approximately $1.8 million of U.S. corn and milo.

CRIME PREVENTION AND CONTROL

A growing number of people believe that governmental efforts should be intensified and financial resources mobilized to prevent and reduce crime.

We are hopeful that more effective anti - crime legislation will be enacted in this session of Congress.

The Senate Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures will hold additional hearings next month on S.917, the Safe Streets and Crime Control Act of 1967, and other Administration anti-crime measures relating to correctional services and the establishment of a Federal Judicial Center.

Included in S.917 is an authorization of $50 million in 1968 and $300 million in 1969 to help states and communities to develop plans for improved law enforcement.

MISSOURI MILITARY ACADEMY

On May 28 I was honored to speak at the commencement exercises of the Missouri Military Academy in Mexico, Missouri.

The day also marked 50 years of service to American youth by Col. C. R. Stribling, who has headed the Academy for 34 years.

This outstanding military academy was founded 78 years ago and presently has an enrollment of 325 cadets in grades 6 through 12.

For 37 years, Missouri Military Academy has been rated an Honor Military School by the Department of the Army.

One of the gifts we received upon the birth of our baby was a kit of disposable nursing bottles. Since I was breast-feeding my baby, I decided to return the gift to the store. I told the saleswoman my reason for not wanting the kit, and I was amused to read on the required form her one-word explanation: "Duplicate."

MAIL BOX

May 28, 1967

Dear "Charlie",

I was so surprised to see the picture of our Basketball team!

I received a copy of the Standard -- from Mrs. Lee Bowman today.

It certainly will bring back many pleasant memories!

It is hard to believe that was taken 39 years ago!

"TIME" is fleeting -- isn't it?

You won't remember -- but, I was the only girl to play "on the team" 4 years.

I was "Sweet 16" when this picture was taken -- and, was a Sophomore. (I hope I was sweet, and considerate of others.)

I was so fond of Lottie Dover. She was a wonderful Coach, Physical Education teacher, lovely, darling, sweet, etc.!

We were all so fortunate to have had her for our teacher! And, M. C. Cunningham for our Principal!

After they left Sikeston -- they lived up here in Jefferson City for a year or so, I believe.

Joe and I were married then, and they were over to see us -- and, we were in their home.

I haven't seen them since they moved to Kansas.

I would certainly like to see them.

I had hoped we would be driving through their city someday -- and, we would get to see them then.

TO YOU -- "Thanks For The Memories"!

Sincerely,
Imogene Mayer

PAUL FLOWERS' Greenhouse

In his introduction to Richard Lamparski's "Whatever Became Of?" (Crown, $4.95), Cleveland Amory Quoted the English critic John Collins:

"The world, like an accomplished hostess, pays most attention to those whom it will soon forget."

Mr. Amory translated Collins' quip into modern show business language, with this drama:

"Who is Hugh O'Brian?"

"Get me Hugh O'Brian."

"Get me a Hugh O'Brian type."

"Get me a young Hugh O'Brian."

"Who was Hugh O'Brian?"

He goes on to tell how a columnist during World War II took a poll to find the world's favorite personality. The Pope finished behind Bing Crosby and Frank Sinatra; others in order were Eisenhower, Father Flanagan, MacArthur, Walter Wenchell, Sister Kenney, and Bob Hope. Joseph Stalin finished 15th.

For the nostalgic minded, eager to relish again headlines names of yesteryear, here are vignettes and pictures of Father Coughlin, Sally Rand, Max Schmeling, Miss America of 1919, Charles A. Lindbergh, Alfred M. Landon, (the Sunflower Hopeful), Bobby Jones, Alexander Kerensky, and Martin Dies.

Others whose names and pictures once graced the news pages and news reels, resurrected here, are Helen Gahagen Douglas, Pola Negri, Red Grange, Libby Holman, Gerald L. K. Smith.

Amos 'n' Andy, Elaine Barrie Barrymore, John T. Scopes of Monkey Trial fame; Hamilton Fish, Charles Atlas, John J. Anthony, Gabriel Heatter, Jesse Owens, Eddie Arcaro, Gertrude Ederle, and Donald Budge.

This goes back to recall Blanche Sweet, Chester Conklin, Douglas "Wrong Way" Corrigan, Hubert F. Julian, the "Black Eagle, Magda Lupescu, and Georges Carpentier. Also representing the ring of old is James J. Braddock; Johnny 'Tarzan' Weissmuller shouts in the jungle again; remember Sonja Henie, 'Jersey Joe' Walcott, Primo Carnera; in the political arena we remember Gerald P. Nye; once-upon-a-time in tennis recalls Helen Wills Moody; here are echoes of Fred Spitalny's music, and the shrill notes of Bobby Breen.

Save a page for Burton K. Wheeler. Fred A. Hartley (of Taft-Hartley Bill fame); Luise Rainer, Norma Shearer, Paulette Goddard, Ramon Navarro, Ilona Massey, Constance Talmadge, the Boswell Sisters, Irene Rich, Beb Daniels, Stepin Fetchit, and Carl Hubbell, once names to conjure with.

Mr. Lamparski has produced a gripping morsel of nostalgia, with 'then- and - now' pictures of onetime celebrities.

Missouri Press Report
Sen. Edward Long

The Senate Labor Committee has just approved a bill calling for 14 new mental health centers in Missouri.

The bill authorized approximately $10,751,000 for mental health centers in Missouri during the next three years.

Am pleased to report that to date, Missouri is one of the nation's leading states in the development of its mental health center program.

We already have centers in St. Louis, Columbia, Joplin, and Kansas City. Three more in Missouri are authorized for construction during the coming months.

By 1970, Missouri will have received $7,027,377 in Federal construction funds for a network of 20 key mental health centers to help serve all sections of Missouri. Missouri will have received an additional $10,240,000 to aid with staffing of the centers.

A bill to increase benefits for veterans serving since the Korean War has just been approved for action on the Senate floor.

This bill, which I co-sponsor, authorizes on-the-job and on-the-farm training programs for veterans and raises educational allowances to $130 per month for a single veteran in school, to $155 per month for a veteran with one dependent and to $175 per month for a veteran with two dependents.

Veterans serving after the Korean War would be eligible for education benefits for full-time apprenticeships under our bill.

A special section of the bill would allow a veteran to receive education assistance while completing high school needed for higher education.

Am hopeful that we can move this important bill through the Congress this session.

What should be done about the rapid increase in the rate of household injuries?

This is the question the proposed National Commission on Product Safety will try to answer if a bill I am supporting is passed by the Congress this year.

The Public Health Service estimates that faulty heating devices are now causing injuries at the rate of 125,000 a year, that stoves, power mowers, and washing machines each cause 100,000 injuries a year.

This year 40,000 citizens will be injuried from glass doors, and 60,000 from electrical extension cords and wall sockets.

The independent Consumers Union, after limited testing, has uncovered 376 products which are "hazardous" and "unacceptable in the home."

Firmly believe that creation of a commission to study this problem is one step in the right direction toward protecting the consumer.

THE GIFT

Cursed with care, heirs to tears,
Tempted and fallen, from Eden set apart,
Together they walked naked into the world.
And, the Father watched them with a saddened heart.
He saw the path before them reach
Down Time's dark lanes on earth's terrain.
What boon, what trait could He bestow,
Til they could be with Him, again?
He pondered with wisdom wide and deep;
And, then a smile around Him broke.
He spread aloft His loving arms;
And, then He spoke.
"From now, and through your life, hereafter,
I bless you, my children, with the gift of laughter."

Polly's Pointers®
Suggests 'Hope Chest' For Household Items

By POLLY CRAMER
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

DEAR POLLY—My Pointer is for brides-to-be. A few months before my wedding I bought a large garbage can. Each week I bought a few inexpensive but necessary household items to go in it. By the time the big day rolled around the can was full and quite a help when that first shopping trip was made. Also after stocking the kitchen shelves from it I had a much-needed trash can.—A. S.

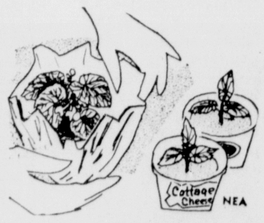
DEAR POLLY—My suggestion for Mrs. R. C. who wants to clean the rush seats to her chairs is that she first clean them with the brush on her vacuum. Apply a fresh coat of clear lacquer and they will look like new.—MRS. M. L. D.

DEAR GIRLS—I have washed such seats and they "tightened" during the drying period. This would be done before varnishing or lacquering.—POLLY

Polly's Problem

DEAR POLLY—My uncle's doctor has ordered him to use a bed that is raised at the head like a hospital bed. He slips down during the night and has fallen out of bed a few times. I do hope some of the readers have a solution for this.—MISS A.V.

DEAR POLLY—I am a mother of four children and have a very limited income but love to give gifts to my friends. I have found an easy way to continue my gift-giving at a small expense. An ever-blooming begonia plant I have had for years does the work for me. I start slips from this hardy plant in cottage cheese and other similar containers. Usually there is one in bloom when I need it, so then I buy pretty containers and transplant the blooming begonia for a nice gift. At times I have just wrapped the makeshift container with foil, put ribbon around it and tied a pretty bow. These plants are nice for the children's teachers. Scout leaders, a new neighbor or moving-away neighbor's gifts. It is a joy to think how far my plants have traveled and how many of my friends have started the same idea.—MRS. H. Y.



DEAR POLLY—Those with lace robes where the lace top and the lining are not fastened together will find that basting the lace to the lining with long stitches down each side will prevent the lace from doubling up and turning back. —DEBORAH.

ANN LANDERS
Answers Your Questions

Dear Ann Landers: I never dreamed I'd write to a newspaper columnist for help, but I can't find the answers alone anymore.

My husband and I are both college graduates. We have three handsome sons. I am ashamed to tell you, but my husband started to collect pornography during adolescence and he can't break the habit.

I have found dozens of obscene pictures and "toys" stuffed between the rafters in the attic, in shoe boxes, in silverware drawers, under the carpets and even in the trunk of his car. Every time I find something new I get sick to my stomach. It is almost as if he plants this junk around where I'm sure to run into it.

Whenever I confront him with a new discovery, he tells the most bizarre lies - insists someone is trying to frame him - that he never saw the stuff before. Then he breaks down and cries and promises he'll never do it again.

Yesterday our 12-year-old son found some pictures and asked me whose they were. I said I didn't know. Please tell me what to do about this problem before I crack up - CAN'T SIGN MY NAME

Dear Can't: Your husband's hang-up dates back to childhood and you must treat it as an illness, which it is most assuredly.

Stop registering shock, disappointment and anger. Tell your husband, calmly, that he must select one hiding place for his collection, that it must be kept locked, that you will keep one key and he will keep the other. Explain that when you find bits and pieces of his collection around you'll put it where it belongs. Then do and say nothing.

Part of your husband's sick kick is witnessing you over-react when you discover the junk. When you reduce your hysteria he'll probably be less interested in his collection.

Dear Ann Landers: My father and mother are divorced. My father has a lady friend and he spends whatever spare time he has with her. He really doesn't have much spare time, though, because he works two jobs, which add up to 16 hours a day.

My mother works a double shift and puts in 15 hours a day. I am just getting into my teens and it seems I have lots of problems and nobody to talk to. I can't call my mother at work because it's against the rules. My father doesn't want to hear from me about my troubles because he has already told me he has plenty of his own.

I have gone to my teachers so many times already I am ashamed to bother them anymore. I need some grown-up help. The future frightens me - LONESOME GIRL

Dear Girl: Don't be ashamed to continue to go to your teachers for counsel. Teachers can be wonderfully helpful and, thank heavens, there are many who want to help. And don't forget me, Toots. I'll listen any time you want to unload. That's what I'm here for.

Confidential to What Shall I Say?: Say NO and make it clear that nothing is going to happen until he comes up with a license. What he'd like, of course, is a learner's permit which is a very old story, my dear. Don't buy it.

If you have trouble getting along with your parents . . .if you can't get them to let you live your own life, send for Ann Landers' booklet, "Bugged By Parents? How to Get More Freedom." Send 50¢ in coin with your request and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Ann Landers will be glad to help you with your problems. Send them to her in care of this newspaper enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE
BY Jack Strass L.L.D.

THE CASE OF THE DOGMA WITH A STIGMA

A state law was passed that authorized lost dogs to be used for scientific purposes. Naturally, this upset the vast populous of canine lovers who raced to court to attack the validity of the statute.

"A dog is an item of personal property," they argued vehemently. "You can't destroy a person's property just because it happens to get lost. It's not only unconstitutional as to the owner of the dog, it's unconsititutional to the dog also."

"Nonsense," answered the state's attorney. "The statute is absolutely legal. What's more, it's unquestionably better that a dog be used for science, for the betterment of humanity, than to permit it to roam the streets and become a menace. It's dogma that will just have to overcome the stigma."

IF YOU WERE THE JUDGE, would you find that the statute violates the constitutional rights of dogs and/or their owners?

This is how the judge ruled: No! The judge held that, under the law, lost dogs properly treated as abandoned property, and, when abandoned, the owners no longer have any rights in the abandoned property.

As for the dogs, concluded the judge in effect, there is no such thing as a dog being deprived of its consititutional rights since, unlike people, they have none.

(Based upon a 1959 Mass. Supreme Judicial Court Decision.)

TODAY'S LEGAL POINTER

If you're dishonest, you will ultimately get caught. If you're not dishonest, basically you're going to lose a lot of sleep for having been dishonest. One way or the other, it pays to obey the law and to follow the straight and narrow.

Washington Report

MIDDLE EAST

It is clear that what we are accustomed to call the Free World, for some time threatened across the DMZ zone and the Ho Chi Minh Trails, now has further problems across the Straits of Tiran and the Gulf of Aqaba. The immediate cause is the blockade declared by President Nasser of Egypt.

Under the Tripartite Agreement of 1950 with Great Britain and France and the defininte commitments made by Secretary of State Dulles with respect to keeping open the Straits of Tiran and their availability to the shipping of all nations, the United States at minimum has a moral obligation in the Middle East.

In view of our already heavy commitments in other parts of the world, it could indeed be a serious matter if the U.S. became involved unilaterally. It is vitally important, therefore, that we only act jointly with the two other signatories of the 1950 Tripartite Agreement; and best of all that we act, if possible, under the United Nations.

PURINA KOREA COMPANY

A Missouri company, Ralston Purine of St. Louis, will be the first United States firm to undertake the development of feed production and poultry raising in Korea. That country is not now self-sufficient in food production.

The Agency for International Development will insure one-half of the U.S. firm's investment of $102,000 in Purina Korea Co., a joint venture by Ralston Purina and Korean shareholders. AID will also issue an extended risk guarantee to cover 75% of a $500,000 U.S. commercial bank loan.

The Purina Korea Co. will construct and operate a feed mill, butchery, broiler processing plant and breeder and grow-out farms. During the first three years of operation, the project is expected to generate sales of approximately $1.8 million of U.S. corn and milo.

CRIME PREVENTION AND CONTROL

A growing number of people believe that governmental efforts should be intensified and financial resources mobilized to prevent and reduce crime.

We are hopeful that more effective anti - crime legislation will be enacted in this session of Congress.

The Senate Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures will hold additional hearings next month on S.917, the Safe Streets and Crime Control Act of 1967, and other Administration anti-crime measures relating to correctional services and the establishment of a Federal Judicial Center.

Included in S.917 is an authorization of $50 million in 1968 and $300 million in 1969 to help states and communities to develop plans for improved law enforcement.

Dear "Charlie",

I was so surprised to see the picture of our Basketball team!

I received a copy of the Standard -- from Mrs. Lee Bowman today.

It certainly will bring back many pleasant memories!

It is hard to believe that was taken 39 years ago!

"TIME" is fleeting -- isn't it?

You won't remember -- but, I was the only girl to play "on the team" 4 years.

I was "Sweet 16" when this picture was taken -- and, was a Sophomore. (I hope I was sweet, and considerate of others.)

I was so fond of Lottie Dover. She was a wonderful Coach, Physical Education teacher, lovely, darling, sweet, etc.!

We were all so fortunate to have had her for our teacher! And, M. C. Cunningham for our Principal!

After they left Sikeston -- they lived up here in Jefferson City for a year or so, I believe.

Joe and I were married then, and they were over to see us -- and, we were in their home.

I haven't seen them since they moved to Kansas.

I would certainly like to see them.

I had hoped we would be driving through their city someday -- and, we would get to see them then.

TO YOU -- "Thanks For The Memories"!

Sincerely,

The bill authorized approximately $10,751,000 for mental health centers in Missouri during the next three years.

Am pleased to report that to date, Missouri is one of the nation's leading states in the development of its mental health center program.

We already have centers in St. Louis, Columbia, Joplin, and Kansas City. Three more in Missouri are authorized for construction during the coming months.

By 1970, Missouri will have received $7,027,377 in Federal construction funds for a network of 20 key mental health centers to help serve all sections of Missouri. Missouri will have received an additional $10,240,000 to aid with staffing of the centers.

A bill to increase benefits for veterans serving since the Korean War has just been approved for action on the Senate floor.

This bill, which I co-sponsor, authorizes on-the-job and on-the-farm training programs for veterans and raises educational allowances to $130 per month for a single veteran in school, to $155 per month for a veteran with one dependent and to $175 per month for a veteran with two dependents.

Veterans serving after the Korean War would be eligible for education benefits for full-time apprenticeships under our bill.

A special section of the bill would allow a veteran to receive education assistance while completing high school needed for higher education.

Am hopeful that we can move this important bill through the Congress this session.

What should be done about the rapid increase in the rate of household injuries?

This is the question the proposed National Commission on Product Safety will try to answer if a bill I am supporting is passed by the Congress this year.

The Public Health Service estimates that faulty heating devices are now causing injuries at the rate of 125,000 a year, that stoves, power mowers, and washing machines each cause 100,000 injuries a year.

This year 40,000 citizens will be injuried from glass doors, and 60,000 from electrical extension cords and wall sockets.

The independent Consumers Union, after limited testing, has uncovered 376 products which are "hazardous" and "unacceptable in the home."

Firmly believe that creation of a commission to study this problem is one step in the right direction toward protecting the consumer.

THE GIFT

Cursed with care, heirs to tears,
Tempted and fallen, from Eden set apart,
Together they walked naked into the world.
And, the Father watched them with a saddened heart.
He saw the path before them reach
Down Time's dark lanes on earth's terrain.
What boon, what trait could He bestow,
Til they could be with Him, again?
He pondered with wisdom wide and deep;
And, then a smile around Him broke.
He spread aloft His loving arms;
And, then He spoke.
"From now, and through your life, hereafter,
I bless you, my children, with the gift of laughter."

Suggests 'Hope Chest' For Household Items

By POLLY CRAMER
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

DEAR POLLY—My Pointer is for brides-to-be. A few months before my wedding I bought a large garbage can. Each week I bought a few inexpensive but necessary household items to go in it. By the time the big day rolled around the can was full and quite a help when that first shopping trip was made. Also after stocking the kitchen shelves from it I had a much-needed trash can.—A. S.

DEAR POLLY—My suggestion for Mrs. R. C. who wants to clean the rush seats to her chairs is that she first clean them with the brush on her vacuum. Apply a fresh coat of clear lacquer and they will look like new.—MRS. M. L. D.

DEAR GIRLS—I have washed such seats and they "tightened" during the drying period. This would be done before varnishing or lacquering.—POLLY

Polly's Problem

DEAR POLLY—My uncle's doctor has ordered him to use a bed that is raised at the head like a hospital bed. He slips down during the night and has fallen out of bed a few times. I do hope some of the readers have a solution for this.—MISS A.V.

DEAR POLLY—I am a mother of four children and have a very limited income but love to give gifts to my friends. I have found an easy way to continue my gift-giving at a small expense. An ever-blooming begonia plant I have had for years does the work for me. I start slips from this hardy plant in cottage cheese and other similar containers. Usually there is one in bloom when I need it, so then I buy pretty containers and transplant the blooming begonia for a nice gift. At times I have just wrapped the makeshift container with foil, put ribbon around it and tied a pretty bow. These plants are nice for the children's teachers. Scout leaders, a new neighbor or moving-away neighbor's gifts. It is a joy to think how far my plants have traveled and how many of my friends have started the same idea.—MRS. H. Y.

DEAR POLLY—Those with lace robes where the lace top and the lining are not fastened together will find that basting the lace to the lining with long stitches down each side will prevent the lace from doubling up and turning back.—DEBORAH.

The telegram points out that the Kansas City office will not approve Head Start funds unless Phillips is reinstated as director of the program.

Edwards also requested that Shriver provide information about who has the power to hire DAEOC officials. At the hearing for Phillips and Graves, Clyde S. Cahill Jr., legal counsel for the regional office, told the board that it had the power to hire and fire its own employes.

The telegram concludes: "We (the DAEOC board) call for a complete and fair investigation of the operations of the OEO programs in Southeast Missouri and the autocratic actions of the Kansas City office."

DAEOC is the war on poverty unit serving Scott, Mississippi, Stoddard, New Madrid, Dunklin and Pemiscot counties.

steps leading to the inner chamber of the temple, reached into the cart, and gathered in his arms the little child and took it into the temple with him.

"After offering prayer he picked up the child again, carried it down the steps and placed it back in the cart.

One of the American men asked, "Did the war do this to the little child?" The answer was yes. The American then asked, "You went into the temple to pray?"

The native replied, "Oh, yes, You see we prayed to let God know that He is our God, and we will never forget."

At that he pointed to the flag the Seabees had in the jeep and said, "My sons, your flag, always remember what it means to you. It was born because of God's guidance in forming your nation."

The flag stands as a symbol of the country for which it stands, he continued.

"A country of pioneers, of conquest, of land and community development. A country which brought forth settlers who believed that the forces of hatred and idealogies of conquest could and must be defeated. A country that moves progressively forward. A country that has reached out its arms to encompass all mankind and to bring to its shores the tired, the poor, and the wanderer -- that they might find a homeland," he continued.

The flag is a symbol of religious privileges, of spiritual blessing and of the age in which we live, he said.

"Oh this day, we remember all our loved ones who have joined the church triumphant and it is with love and sadness that this is a special day of rememberance. As we appropriate the courage and heroism of the past, we make the past a part of our lives.

He then read William Rose Benet's poem "Good Luck Soldier."

The ceremony closed with the playing of taps.

Wiretapping Bill Passes

JEFFERSON CITY (AP) -- A bill to ban wiretapping, bugging or other electronic snooping was passed by the Missouri Senate today. The vote sending it to the House was 23-7.

Law enforcement officers could use electronic eavesdropping devices in cases involving treason, kidnaping or overthrow of the government. Even then they would have to get a court order to do it.

Altogether the Senate sent 13 bills to the House in a busy morning. Among them were two that would allow the state to participate in federal programs.

One would let the state set up parks, marinas or other recreational facilities at federal reservoirs. The federal government would advance the money and the projects would be paid for by user fees over a 50-year period.

The other would permit the state to transmit grants to sewer districts or other local units for water pollution control projects. Its cost is estimated at $5 million.

The federal government would pay 50 per cent of the cost, the state 25 per cent and the local unit 25 per cent.

Also passed, 30-2, was a bill to increase the uniformed strength of the Highway Patrol from 650 to 750 men at an annual cost of $1,121,000. The rank of corporal would be added.

Other bills passed included ones to:

Require junk dealers to report any purchases of copper wire or copper products to the sheriff—an effort to curb the growing number of copper thefts.

Require insurance companies to offer coverage to their policyholders to protect them against uninsured motorists.

Give Kansas City 50 per cent of the county road and bridge tax collected in the city.

Raise the pay of the director of the Mental Diseases Division from $25,000 to $35,000 a year. Some of his psychiatrists already get $33,000.

Set up a governor's mansion advisory commission composed of the widows of former governors and pay them $3,000 a year for their services.

The House passed 140-5 a bill establishing an interstate compact on taxtion, to allocate to the states the tax obligation of firms operating in interstate commerce.

Sponsors said it was needed to keep the federal government from taking over the field.

Adoption of a minor House amendment sends the bill back to the Senate.

Twice the House ran into trouble on the Senate version of the LSD bill.

An amendment was offered that would change the penalty for possession, sale or transfer of hallucinogenic drugs—except by doctors — from a misdemeanor to a felony.

An objection was al raised about permitting nurses to dispense these drugs so it was laid over while the House sponsor, Rep. Carl Niewoehner, D-Columbia, prepared amendments to change the bill.

The House passed a Senate bill without change to permit extension of commercial zoning for use by heavy trucks, from one mile to a possible 15-mile limit. It would let heavy construction trucks use state roads around cities where building is booming. The bill goes to the governor.

Tuesday the Senate passed and sent to the governor a bill to cut the unemployment taxes of Missouri employers.

Cigarettes, Money Taken

Cigarettes and coins of an undetermined amount were reported stolen from a vending machine in Harris Grocery Store, 227 Petty, police reported today.

The breakin was discovered by Mrs. Carrie Harris, wife of the store owner, at about 9 a.m. today, police said.

Entry was gained by twisting off the latch on the front door, police said.

In other activity, two Negro juveniles were arrested by police at 9:45 a.m. today. The youths admitted taking three packages of cigarettes from a parked car and a package of hamburger buns from a Hart's Bakery truck, police said.

Another juvenile was arrested Tuesday at Edward's IGA Supermarket, 863 West Malone, attempting to steal a carton of cigarettes, police reported. He was transferred to the authority of the juvenile officer.

The rear door of a building formerly used to store furniture in the 100 block of west Center Street was broken into Tuesday, police reported. The building houses an office used by W. R. Lair, 322 N. New Madrid. He was called by police to check the building, and nothing was noticed missing, police said.

Herbert C. Reno, North Street, was charged by police Monday with public intoxication. He was arrested at 518 South Kingshighway.

said the bulk of the Soviet naval force is expected to sail through the strait June 3. They are destroyers No. 626, 383 and 514.

The command said another destroyer, No. 355, and the icebreaker Verdusanov are expected to pass through the Bosporus. They will be accompanied by a torpedo boat.

According to a sailing schedule of Soviet warships through the strait handed to the Turkish government and disclosed by the strait command, an oceangoing tug will follow them June 7.

Vice Adm. William I. Martin, commander of the 6th Fleet, said Tuesday the United States intends to keep the international sea lanes open.

"We will do whatever we are directed to do by the President and that includes a whole range of options," said Rear Adm. Lawrence R. Geis, commander of the 6th Fleet's Task Force 60.

A buildup of Western naval power also appeared under way in the Red Sea as Britain's Cabinet pondered ways for joint action with the United States and other maritime powers to beat Egypt's blockade of the Gulf of Aqaba, Israel's access to the Red Sea.

The British were reported considering formation of a naval task force to escort ships through the Strait of Tiran into the gulf where Israel's chief oil importing port of Elath is located.

A British Foreign Office spokesman in London stressed, however, that Britian and other western powers are still concentrating on a search for a diplomatic settlement.

Informants said a naval escort would not necessarily mean the use of force but might make Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser think twice about trying to turn back shipping to Elath.

The British aircraft carrier Hermes, two frigates and five minesweepers of the Royal Navy were reported in the vicinity of Aden, at the southern entrance to the Red Sea. British newspapers have reported that two U.S. destroyers also are in the Red Sea area, in addition to powerful units of the 6th Fleet and the Royal Navy that are expected to rendezvous soon in the eastern Mediterranean.

Adm. Martin refused to say whether the U. S. carrier Intrepid - now in the Mediterranean but not under his command- might be ordered to go through the Suez Canal. The Intrepid, with 70 attack planes, was originally bound for Vietnam but has been held in the Mediterranean.

It is the only carrier in the area small enough to pass through the canal and could be used to bolster Western naval strength in the Red Sea and in the area of the Gulf of Aqaba.

Nasser tightened the squeeze on Israel another notch Tuesday, signing a mutual defense pact in Cairo with his old enemy King Hussein of Jordan.

Nasser posed smilingly with the Jordanian monarch whom he had denounced less than a month ago as an agent of American intelligence. The two leaders called each other "brothers' and pledged to combine their military forces against Israel in a five-year renewable pact.

"The world will be astonished today when it hears of this agreement," Nasser said after the signing.

"This proof that Arabs forget their differences at serious times," said Nasser. "Israel, the United States and Britain must realize that we are determined to preserve our rights in Palestine."

City Flushing Water Hydrants

Board of Public Works workers today began flushing out rusty water in the city water lines by opening fire hydrants on the east side of Highway 61, E. R. Inman, manager, said today.

Flushing will continue until the lines are clear. The flushing is done about twice a year, he said.

All hydrants east of the highway will be flushed first.

Hydrants west of the highway will be opened later he said.

The flushing may cause residents in the area where the lines are being flushed to have more rust appear until the line is clear, he said. He advised against washing today.

Dog Fractures Beaird's Knee

James (Jim) Beaird, 1914 Kentucky Road, is nursing a fractured knee as the result of being knocked to the ground by his coon dog.

Beaird said, "The dog zigged when he should have zagged," as he was getting his dog out to exercise. The animal made a sudden lunge, causing his knee cap to be knocked down, resulting in the fracture.

He has been getting around on crutches since the accident May 19, and will remain on them for another five weeks.

BARN IN SUBURBIA

Defiantly the lone barn, sagging, squats
Tip - tilted on its ancient, moldering base.
Around it pastel homes on ordered plots
Enroached upon its heritage of space.

A graceless form, its purpose long fulfilled,
Grotesquely hunched with years and weather - browned
The barn, a time - scored sentry, iron - willed,
Broods upon the past -- and stands its ground.

Foyt Wins Indy. 500

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (AP) — A heart-breaking power failure just 7½ miles from the finish by Parnelli Jones' revolutionary turbine racer swept Texan A.J. Foyt to his third 500-mile auto race victory in a wreck-jammed delayed running of the 51st motor classic today.

In an incredible windup to a bizarre race, which was postponed by rain after 45 miles Tuesday, Foyt—who had ostensibly settled for second place behind the record-smashing Jones—suddenly was handed victory when the sleek red turbine quit and limped into the pits.

Foyt, who previously won the 1964 and 1961 races, snaked through a spectacular five-car home stretch crackup on the last lap.

Foyt, who nudged ahead of Jones only twice during pit stops by the turbine, was clocked in a record average time of 151.207 miles per hour.

Foyt, who joined a select group of three-time Indy winners including Mauri Rose, Louis Meyer and Wilbur Shaw, broke the former record of 150.686 set by Scotland's Jim Clark in 1965.

Had Jones, whose wonder car suddenly was stricken by a broken gear box, been able to finish, the record would have been smashed by about an average of two or three miles per hour faster.

Five Hurt in Two-Car Crash

Five persons were slightly injured in a two-car collision at 10:15 a.m. on Memorial Day, two miles north of Cape Girardeau on highway 61.

A 1966 Ford, driven by Harvey Clark, 37, Bridgeton passed another vehicle on the yellow line, and struck a 1965 Cadillac, driven by James Johannes, 25, Jackson, headon, the patrol charged.

Injured in the Clark car were Julia Clark, 22, bruises on the body; Carlis clark, 11, arm and head bruises, and the driver, cuts and bruises on the head. All are from Bridgeton.

Injured in the Johannes car were the driver, bruises on his lip, and a passenger, John Stobbe, 22, Blytheville, Ark., with bruises on the nose and knee.

All of the injured were taken to the Southeast Missouri hospital in Cape Girardeau.

Clark was arrested for improper passing.

Tuesday at 1:10 a.m., on highway 61, six miles north of Portageville, Emanuel Geiser, 32, Cape Girardeau, driver of a 1965 Chevrolet, received a neck injury when his car struck a trailer.

He was passing another car when a hitch on a 1966 Chevrolet truck, driven by Eniz Monez, 38, Houston, Tex., broke, causing the Geiser car to strike it.

James Menz, 56, Illmo, was arrested for careless and imprudent driving in an accident Monday on Interstate 55, a half mile north of Scott City.

He was driving a 1963 Corvair, when he ran off the road and struck a guard rail.

Menz received cuts on his head and arms and was taken to the St. Francis hospital in Cape Girardeau.

Orbits of Thought

FIVE weeks spent in the hospital have slipped away with amazing swiftness and already the routine, so welcome at first, is boresome.

Now the newspaper is important again. The world is pushing in, and the hospital is where on used to be, although it is still one's address for a few more days.

Because this has been a new experience, there have been new thoughts about life and death, and the way people face both. The usual direction of thought has been radically diverted.

I have thought sometimes of our Lord walking through a modern hospital with wonder and joy. Always acutely sensitive to the needs of others, He would be, I think, especially vulnerable to the mute claims of the sick.

In His day the incurable lay in public places, begging their subsistence, a constant reminder not only of man's inhumanity to man, but of man's impotence then to deal with sickness.

Imagine His delight, for example, to walk through the rehabilitation department of the hospital and observe what is being done for men by other men. Here are the people who, in His day, waited at the pool for the "troubling of the waters" -- their one slim chance for healing.

Little children are here, young men and women, on up to an 85-year-old man in a cast from his neck to hips, yet with enormous courage, inch by painful inch, learning to walk again.

Once these would have been the rejects of life, doomed to days of wretched neglect, futile living and a miserable death. Now, thanks to the concern of men for other men, they are going on to independent living, to work, to useful membership in society.

When those around Him spoke wonderingly of His miracles, our Lord said a strange thing: "You shall do greater things than these . . ." These, surely, are the greater things of which He spokes -- the wonder of man seeking out human needs and learning how to meet those needs through lives of unbelievable sacrifice and dedication.

I have also been deeply moved by the gallant ways in which people came to terms, both with continued living, and with dying.

For many, perhaps for most, these are lonely and certainly unfamiliar roads. One of my new friends is going home to a life of semi-invalidism.

Lively, gay, married to a man who thrives on good times, entertainment, shows, and life in a general, she faced the future with dread.

One day we talked about it. "What I must do now," she said, "is to develop inner resources so that whatever happens I shall be not too startled or shocked. This is my challenge, and I feel that in Christ I shall have strength to take it up."

My roommate's problem was different. She was going home to die, and knew it. She was a beautiful woman, both to look at, and in spirit.

Late one night, lying in the darkness, we spoke of death. As we talked we began to think that perhaps death was merely an extension of life on another plane. That just as one was conscious of that which is above and beyond, so death might be the door through which we stepped in to transcendent life.

"You know," said my friend, "my mother used to say 'When God closes one door He opens another.' I am going to believe that death is another part of the House of Life -- the most beautiful and the best, and that when the door closes, the door to Life will be already opening."

The experiences of these five weeks will soon be like a dream, but never, never shall we forget that here we came face to face with realities of life -- life and death, the lonely battlefield of the human spirit where unsuspected depths of insight, courage and faith are given to those whose need is great.

Wiretapping Bill Passes

JEFFERSON CITY (AP) -- A bill to ban wiretapping, bugging or other electronic snooping was passed by the Missouri Senate today. The vote sending it to the House was 23-7.

Law enforcement officers could use electronic eavesdropping devices in cases involving treason, kidnaping or overthrow of the government. Even then they would have to get a court order to do it.

Altogether the Senate sent 13 bills to the House in a busy morning. Among them were two that would allow the state to participate in federal programs.

One would let the state set up parks, marinas or other recreational facilities at federal reservoirs. The federal government would advance the money and the projects would be paid for by user fees over a 50-year period.

The other would permit the state to transmit grants to sewer districts or other local units for water pollution control projects. Its cost is estimated at $5 million.

The federal government would pay 50 per cent of the cost, the state 25 per cent and the local unit 25 per cent.

Also passed, 30-2, was a bill to increase the uniformed strength of the Highway Patrol from 650 to 750 men at an annual cost of $1,121,000. The rank of corporal would be added.

Other bills passed included ones to:

Require junk dealers to report any purchases of copper wire or copper products to the sheriff—an effort to curb the growing number of copper thefts.

Require insurance companies to offer coverage to their policyholders to protect them against uninsured motorists.

Give Kansas City 50 per cent of the county road and bridge tax collected in the city.

Raise the pay of the director of the Mental Diseases Division from $25,000 to $35,000 a year. Some of his psychiatrists already get $33,000.

Set up a governor's mansion advisory commission composed of the widows of former governors and pay them $3,000 a year for their services.

The House passed 140-5 a bill establishing an interstate compact on taxtion, to allocate to the states the tax obligation of firms operating in interstate commerce.

Sponsors said it was needed to keep the federal government from taking over the field.

Adoption of a minor House amendment sends the bill back to the Senate.

Twice the House ran into trouble on the Senate version of the LSD bill.

An amendment was offered that would change the penalty for possession, sale or transfer of hallucinogenic drugs—except by doctors — from a misdemeanor to a felony.

An objection was al raised about permitting nurses to dispense these drugs so it was laid over while the House sponsor, Rep. Carl Niewoehner, D-Columbia, prepared amendments to change the bill.

The House passed a Senate bill without change to permit extension of commercial zoning for use by heavy trucks, from one mile to a possible 15-mile limit. It would let heavy construction trucks use state roads around cities where building is booming. The bill goes to the governor.

Tuesday the Senate passed and sent to the governor a bill to cut the unemployment taxes of Missouri employers.

The center will serve Bollinger, Butler, Cape Girardeau, Carter, Dunklin, Mississippi, New Madrid, Pemiscot, Ripley, Scott, Stoddard and Wayne counties.

Cigarettes, Money Taken

Cigarettes and coins of an undetermined amount were reported stolen from a vending machine in Harris Grocery Store, 227 Petty, police reported today.

The breakin was discovered by Mrs. Carrie Harris, wife of the store owner, at about 9 a.m. today, police said.

Entry was gained by twisting off the latch on the front door, police said.

In other activity, two Negro juveniles were arrested by police at 9:45 a.m. today. The youths admitted taking three packages of cigarettes from a parked car and a package of hamburger buns from a Hart's Bakery truck, police said.

Another juvenile was arrested Tuesday at Edward's IGA Supermarket, 863 West Malone, attempting to steal a carton of cigarettes, police reported. He was transferred to the authority of the juvenile officer.

The rear door of a building formerly used to store furniture in the 100 block of west Center Street was broken into Tuesday, police reported. The building houses an office used by W. R. Lair, 322 N. New Madrid. He was called by police to check the building, and nothing was noticed missing, police said.

Herbert C. Reno, North Street, was charged by police Monday with public intoxication. He was arrested at 518 South Kingshighway.

James J. Tidwell, route two, Sikeston, was charged by police with public intoxication Tuesday on East Malone, police reported.

A small vending machine believed to have been used for candy or bubble gum was found Tuesday evening on the railroad tracks on Sunset Drive. It was taken to the police station.

said the bulk of the Soviet naval force is expected to sail through the strait June 3. They are destroyers No. 626, 383 and 514.

The command said another destroyer, No. 355, and the icebreaker Verdusanov are expected to pass through the Bosporus. They will be accompanied by a torpedo boat.

According to a sailing schedule of Soviet warships through the strait handed to the Turkish government and disclosed by the strait command, an oceangoing tug will follow them June 7.

Vice Adm. William I. Martin, commander of the 6th Fleet, said Tuesday the United States intends to keep the international sea lanes open.

"We will do whatever we are directed to do by the President and that includes a whole range of options," said Rear Adm. Lawrence R. Geis, commander of the 6th Fleet's Task Force 60.

A buildup of Western naval power also appeared under way in the Red Sea as Britain's Cabinet pondered ways for joint action with the United States and other maritime powers to beat Egypt's blockade of the Gulf of Aqaba, Israel's access to the Red Sea.

The British were reported considering formation of a naval task force to escort ships through the Strait of Tiran into the gulf where Israel's chief oil importing port of Elath is located.

A British Foreign Office spokesman in London stressed, however, that Britian and other western powers are still concentrating on a search for a diplomatic settlement.

Informants said a naval escort would not necessarily mean the use of force but might make Egyptian President Gamal Abdel Nasser think twice about trying to turn back shipping to Elath.

The British aircraft carrier Hermes, two frigates and five minesweepers of the Royal Navy were reported in the vicinity of Aden, at the southern entrance to the Red Sea. British newspapers have reported that two U.S. destroyers also are in the Red Sea area, in addition to powerful units of the 6th Fleet and the Royal Navy that are expected to rendezvous soon in the eastern Mediterranean.

Adm. Martin refused to say whether the U. S. carrier Intrepid - now in the Mediterranean but not under his command- might be ordered to go through the Suez Canal. The Intrepid, with 70 attack planes, was originally bound for Vietnam but has been held in the Mediterranean.

It is the only carrier in the area small enough to pass through the canal and could be used to bolster Western naval strength in the Red Sea and in the area of the Gulf of Aqaba.

Nasser tightened the squeeze on Israel another notch Tuesday, signing a mutual defense pact in Cairo with his old enemy King Hussein of Jordan.

Nasser posed smilingly with the Jordanian monarch whom he had denounced less than a month ago as an agent of American intelligence. The two leaders called each other "brothers' and pledged to combine their military forces against Israel in a five-year renewable pact.

"The world will be astonished today when it hears of this agreement," Nasser said after the signing.

"This proof that Arabs forget their differences at serious times," said Nasser. "Israel, the United States and Britain must realize that we are determined to preserve our rights in Palestine."

City Flushing Water Hydrants

Board of Public Works workers today began flushing out rusty water in the city water lines by opening fire hydrants on the east side of Highway 61, E. R. Inman, manager, said today.

Flushing will continue until the lines are clear. The flushing is done about twice a year, he said.

All hydrants east of the highway will be flushed first.

Hydrants west of the highway will be opened later he said.

The flushing may cause residents in the area where the lines are being flushed to have more rust appear until the line is clear, he said. He advised against washing today.

Dog Fractures Beaird's Knee

James (Jim) Beaird, 1914 Kentucky Road, is nursing a fractured knee as the result of being knocked to the ground by his coon dog.

Beaird said, "The dog zigged when he should have zagged," as he was getting his dog out to exercise. The animal made a sudden lunge, causing his knee cap to be knocked down, resulting in the fracture.

He has been getting around on crutches since the accident May 19, and will remain on them for another five weeks.

BARN IN SUBURBIA

Defiantly the lone barn, sagging, squats
Tip - tilted on its ancient, moldering base.
Around it pastel homes on ordered plots
Enroached upon its heritage of space.

A graceless form, its purpose long fulfilled,
Grotesquely hunched with years and weather - browned
The barn, a time - scored sentry, iron - willed,
Broods upon the past -- and, stands its ground.

Foyt Wins Indy. 500

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (AP) — A heart-breaking power failure just 7½ miles from the finish by Parnelli Jones' revolutionary turbine racer swept Texan A.J. Foyt to his third 500-mile auto race victory in a wreck-jammed delayed running of the 51st motor classic today.

In an incredible windup to a bizarre race, which was postponed by rain after 45 miles Tuesday, Foyt—who had ostensibly settled for second place behind the record-smashing Jones—suddenly was handed victory when the sleek red turbine quit and limped into the pits.

Foyt, who previously won the 1964 and 1961 races, snaked through a spectacular five-car home stretch crackup on the last lap.

Foyt, who nudged ahead of Jones only twice during pit stops by the turbine, was clocked in a record average time of 151.207 miles per hour.

Foyt, who joined a select group of three-time Indy winners including Mauri Rose, Louis Meyer and Wilbur Shaw, broke the former record of 150.686 set by Scotland's Jim Clark in 1965.

Had Jones, whose wonder car suddenly was stricken by a broken gear box, been able to finish, the record would have been smashed by about an average of two or three miles per hour faster.

Five Hurt in Two-Car Crash

Five persons were slightly injured in a two-car collision at 10:15 a.m. on Memorial Day, two miles north of Cape Girardeau on highway 61.

A 1966 Ford, driven by Harvey Clark, 37, Bridgeton passed another vehicle on the yellow line, and struck a 1965 Cadillac, driven by James Johannes, 25, Jackson, headon, the patrol charged.

Injured in the Clark car were Julia Clark, 22, bruises on the body; Carlis clark, 11, arm and head bruises, and the driver, cuts and bruises on the head. All are from Bridgeton.

Injured in the Johannes car were the driver, bruises on his lip, and a passenger, John Stobbe, 22, Blytheville, Ark., with bruises on the nose and knee.

All of the injured were taken to the Southeast Missouri hospital in Cape Girardeau.

Clark was arrested for improper passing.

Tuesday at 1:10 a.m., on highway 61, six miles north of Portageville, Emanuel Geiser, 32, Cape Girardeau, driver of a 1965 Chevrolet, received a neck injury when his car struck a trailer.

He was passing another car when a hitch on a 1966 Chevrolet truck, driven by Eniz Monez, 38, Houston, Tex., broke, causing the Geiser car to strike it.

James Menz, 56, Illmo, was arrested for careless and imprudent driving in an accident Monday on Interstate 55, a half mile north of Scott City.

He was driving a 1963 Corvair, when he ran off the road and struck a guard rail.

Menz received cuts on his head and arms and was taken to the St. Francis hospital in Cape Girardeau.

Orbits of Thought

FIVE weeks spent in the hospital have slipped away with amazing swiftness and already the routine, so welcome at first, is boresome.

Now the newspaper is important again. The world is pushing in, and the hospital is where on used to be, although it is still one's address for a few more days.

Because this has been a new experience, there have been new thoughts about life and death, and the way people face both. The usual direction of thought has been radically diverted.

I have thought sometimes of our Lord walking through a modern hospital with wonder and joy. Always acutely sensitive to the needs of others, He would be, I think, especially vulnerable to the mute claims of the sick.

In His day the incurable lay in public places, begging their subsistence, a constant reminder not only of man's inhumanity to man, but of man's impotence then to deal with sickness.

Imagine His delight, for example, to walk through the rehabilitation department of the hospital and observe what is being done for men by other men. Here are the people who, in His day, waited at the pool for the "troubling of the waters" -- their one slim chance for healing.

Little children are here, young men and women, on up to an 85-year-old man in a cast from his neck to hips, yet with enormous courage, inch by painful inch, learning to walk again.

Once these would have been the rejects of life, doomed to days of wretched neglect, futile living and a miserable death. Now, thanks to the concern of men for other men, they are going on to independent living, to work, to useful membership in society.

When those around Him spoke wonderingly of His miracles, our Lord said a strange thing: "You shall do greater things than these . . ." These, surely, are the greater things of which He spokes -- the wonder of man seeking out human needs and learning how to meet those needs through lives of unbelievable sacrifice and dedication.

I have also been deeply moved by the gallant ways in which people came to terms, both with continued living, and with dying.

For many, perhaps for most, these are lonely and certainly unfamiliar roads. One of my new friends is going home to a life of semi-invalidism.

Lively, gay, married to a man who thrives on good times, entertainment, shows, and life in a general, she faced the future with dread.

One day we talked about it. "What I must do now," she said, "is to develop inner resources so that whatever happens I shall be not too startled or shocked. This is my challenge, and I feel that in Christ I shall have strength to take it up."

My roommate's problem was different. She was going home to die, and knew it. She was a beautiful woman, both to look at, and in spirit.

Late one night, lying in the darkness, we spoke of death. As we talked we began to think that perhaps death was merely an extension of life on another plane. That just as one was conscious of that which is above and beyond, so death might be the door through which we stepped in to transcendent life.

"You know," said my friend, " my mother used to say 'When God closes one door He opens another.' I am going to believe that death is another part of the House of Life -- the most beautiful and the best, and that when the door closes, the door to Life will be already opening."

The experiences of these five weeks will soon be like a dream, but never, never shall we forget that here we came face to face with realities of life -- life and death, the lonely battlefield of the human spirit where unsuspected depths of insight, courage and faith are given to those whose need is great.

Arab Nations Get More U.S. Aid Than Israel

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has sent more than $2 billion in aid since World War II to five Arab nations involved in the current Middle East crisis with neighboring Israel.

That's nearly twice the dollar value of all forms of U.S. government aid to Israel.

But unlike the Arab nations, Israel has in the United States private sources of aid and financing that have provided the Jewish homeland funds at least equaling the total of U.S. government help to Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Yemen and the United Arab Republic.

Military aid of $227.8 million included in the total for Israel's Arabic neighbors has gone almost entirely to Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

Most of Jordan's $66 million has been outright grants of money and excess American military equipment. But government records show substantial portions of the $517.2 million in economic aid for Jordan has gone into construction of roads and facilities planned to bolster the kingdom's defense position.

A decade ago the United States took over from Britain most of the burden of supporting Jordan. American support has continued, a handbook of the Agency for International Development states, because of "the danger that Jordan's dismemberment might produce violence throughout the area."

Military aid for Jordan compares with $27.6 million for Israel, all in credit assistance to help Israel buy arms.

Saudi Arabia has received $161.7 million in military assistance against $47.4 of economic aid. But 60 per cent of the total has been in the form of loans or credits.

Only $100,000 of the $73.3 million aid total for Syria has been for military purposes and more than one-half has been in loans.

All of the $41.8 million for Yemen has been outright gifts, with less than $50,000 alloted for military aid. U.S. aid to Yemen ended this spring, after the state arrested two American officials, who later were released on bail and then left the country.

Egypt has some of her best troops in Yemen, which has received an estimated $140 million in economic and defense support assistance from Red China and the Soviet Union since 1957.

The United States has aided Egypt to the tune of $1.13 billion — or more than half the total assistance to the Arab states of the Middle East.

All of this aid has been economic, and most has gone to Egypt through the Food for Peace program. Sale in Egypt of this food, mostly grains, has in turn generated local currency loans to the government of President Gamal Abdel Nasser and lesser amounts to Egyptian private industry.

As in many countries, these loans are repaid or credited to the account of the United States in local currencies and do not come back to Washington in the form of dollars.

Food shipments to Egypt ceased last June, but technical assistance valued at about $1.4 million continues. Also still under way is a $9.5-million program of feeding people, conducted through voluntary agencies working with the U.S. government.

UNITED ARAB REPUBLIC PRESIDENT GAMAL ABDEL NASSER'S eldest son, Abdel Hamid (left), 16, takes rifle practice with the Futewa Youth Organization in Heliopolis, Cairo. President Nasser said in a speech that "our main objective will be the destruction of Israel."

PAUL FLOWERS'
Greenhouse

C. C. Coker of Rienzi, Miss., on behalf of citizens of Old Jacinto, rises to protest Greenhouse's spelling of the popular pronunciation of the town's name. Mr. Coker reports that it is more likely to be pronounced "Jay-CIN-ta," and I accept the amendment, reluctant as I am to trust my ears.

Actually, French and Spanish proper names come out with some odd twists . . . Bellefontaine becomes Bell-Fountain; D'lo emerges as "Dee-Low" in two syllables, and Monticello, from the Italian, is never pronounced with the "c" sounded as "ch."

Proper Spanish pronunciation of Jacinto, as "Hah-THEEN-tow," would sound odd in our part of the world; indeed, among Spanish - speaking people south of us, it appears as "Ha-sin-toe"; Saltillo, both in Tennessee and Mississippi, has been Americanized; Buena Vista becomes simply "Buna Vista."

LaFayette is rendered in Tennessee and Mississippi as LA-FAY-ette, with heavy accent on the second syllable; but in Louisiana, where a stronger French-speaking tradition persists the accent falls on the final syllable.

Nor are these standards confined to any region. In Ohio, Toeldo is rendered "T'leda"; Cincinnati and Miami become "Cincinnata" and "Miama"; a street in Lower Manhattan is "Howston" there, a pronunciation hich irritates residents along Texas' Buffalo Bayou.

When Al Smith and his backers went to Houston for the Democratic National Convention in 1928, Al and many of the others outraged Texans by calling the host city "How-ston," and compounded the felony by alluding to wireless as "Raddi-o," to rhyme with "Daddy-o."

Many Mississippians pronounce Dr. Toxey Hall's Delta town as "Belzona"; and if you follow the river which flows past Little Rock up to Garden City, Kan., it becomes "Ar-KAN-sas." That irks Arkansawers.

At the juncture of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, there is the city of Cairo, pronounced in this country like a brand of corn syrup; the city in Egypt for which it was named is "Ky-ro."

Yankees do some quaint things with pronunciations of Louisiana and New Orleans; homefolks are prone to make them into "Lo-zana," and "Noo-Wallance."

Terre Haute in Indiana gets some special treatment at home and abroad; pronunciation of Los Angeles can stir a debate (backed by horse pistols;) and patriots around the Golden Gate will thank you not to call their city "Frisco."

Minnesota has its Montevideo, pronounced very unlike the Spanish city in Uruguay; and Missouri's Potosi comes out, in the Show - Me State, as "Po - TOE-si."

Radio and television pundits have a hard time with Mississippi's Tupelo; they can't resist the temptation to shift an accent and make it. "Tu-PEL-o." Towns and counties bearing the name of the Venezuelan diplomat and hero, shift the accent to the first syllable; Simon called himself "SEE-mon Bol-ee-var."

Who's to say how people of a region should pronounce their place names and their own surnames? Mark Twain had considerable fun with a nouveau-riche Dunlap family of Scottish origin, when they Frenchified it into d'Un Lappe. It made them happy.

With all of which, here's an apology to Mr. Coker and all the good folks of Old Jacinto, and a hearty endorsement of whatever way they want to pronounce it. Commercial Appeal

So That's A Shamrock

John J. Pinney in
The Kansas City Star

Probably no country has an emblem more closely identified with it than the shamrock is with Ireland.

It was St. Patrick himself who was responsible for this. Tradition has it that he used the trifoliate shamrock to illustrate the nature of the Trinity.

The traditional Irish ballad "The Wearin' O' the Green" not only expresses the indomitable spirit of freedom of the Irish but identified the shamrock with "the Green" and provides evidence that it is some sort of plant.

What is this shamrock that will take root if it is thrown upon the ground and which means so much to the Irish? According to Bailey's Cyclopedia of Horticulture, "half the world is sure that shamrock is wood sorrel (oaxlis acetosella) while the other half is equally certain that the true shamrock is white clover (Trifolium repens)."

When we were in Ireland we decided to do a little shamrock research on our own. On the road from Limerick to Dublin we came upon a charming little white washed stone cottage. The roof was thatched. Along the front of the cottage and separated from the road by a low stone wall was a lovely flower garden.

This seemed a likely place to look for the shamrock. We were graciously received by the cottager's wife and shown through the little dwelling, which was as charming inside as out.

After explaining that our ancestors, only one generation back, were from Ireland and we had been visiting the home near Bantry Bay, we inquired if there were any shamrocks in that lovely garden.

"Indeed there are. Let me show them to you."

And we were led into the little fairy-land garden. In a corner under a rose bush were several small clumps of foliage that looked like clover to us. The three-part leaves were not much larger than a mouse's ear.

While we were photographing the shamrock we noticed a clump of wood soorel nearby.

"Isn't this also called shamrock?" we inquired.

"Yes, it is called that by some, but it is not the true shamrock."

When we remarked that her supply of shamrock seemed to be rather small she explained that British tourists would beg for plants to take home to England.

"I don't know whatever for," she said, "because you know the shamrock will not grow in England."

The shamrock can be grown from seed so while in Dublin we called on a seedsman at the 19 Cork Hill street. He had the seed in neat little packets, with cultural instructions printed on them:

"Sow thinly in open garden or flower box in late summer or early autumn. Add a little lime to the soil."

As simple as that! When we inquired of the seedsman the botanical name of the shamrock, he looked at us pityingly as if to imply that every Irishman should know that and replied, "Trifolium repens, of course."

The festival of Whitsun, or Pentecost, falls on the seventh Sunday after Easter. The English celebrate Whitmonday with games, sports, dancing, ale quaffing and general springtime revelry.

Saving A Man's Soul is Not Enough

By Richard O. Bennett, Secretary - Treasurer Insurance Institute for Highway Safety.

Around our house the so-called breadwinner (me) will on occasion dare to penetrate the realm of household management by making a cautious suggestion, such as "How come jelly on the TV screen?" Invariably the vice-president in charge of major decisions (the wife) will offer a bit of mailed-fist advice, such as "You mind the office and I'll mind the house," or words to that effect.

This bit of domestic repartee has really nothing to do with the topic to be garnished with random thoughts in this article. It was included only to illustrate a situation that is rampant in traffic safety circles today.

It seems that people in the various traffic accident prevention persuasions are jealous of their prerogatives. When a plain everyday citizen dares to comment to a traffic engineer that a certain traffic signal causes more accidents than it prevents, he usually is squelched with a remark such as "It's getting so every Tom, Dick, and Harry thinks he's a traffic engineer."

Many traffic policeman are convinced that they and they alone are endowed, through their power of arrest, with the magic touch needed to curtail traffic accidents.

Even some highway builders are enamored with the idea that all efforts by other disciplines to prevent motor vehicle collisions are just so much fluff, and that only by building multi-laned divided highways (sans intersections, pedestrians, and roadside obstructions) can the frequency of accieent be materially reduced.

The traffic judge, the researcher, the psychiatrist, the educator, and even the city planner seem to be of the opinion that the solution to the traffic problem lies within his capabilities, and nowhere else.

But, also, the one persuasion that, according to logic, could have the greatest influence on this important humanitarian movement is content to sit back and let George do it. I have reference to the clergy, of course. History of mankind is replete with examples of the influence for good that religious leaders have had in times of crisis -- disaster, war, plague, famine, and revolution.

Arab Nations Get More U.S. Aid Than Israel

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has sent more than $2 billion in aid since World War II to five Arab nations involved in the current Middle East crisis with neighboring Israel.

That's nearly twice the dollar value of all forms of U.S. government aid to Israel.

But unlike the Arab nations, Israel has in the United States private sources of aid and financing that have provided the Jewish homeland funds at least equaling the total of U.S. government help to Jordan, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Yemen and the United Arab Republic.

Military aid of $227.8 million included in the total for Israel's Arabic neighbors has gone almost entirely to Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

Most of Jordan's $66 million has been outright grants of money and excess American military equipment. But government records show substantial portions of the $517.2 million in economic aid for Jordan has gone into construction of roads and facilities planned to bolster the kingdom's defense position.

A decade ago the United States took over from Britain most of the burden of supporting Jordan. American support has continued, a handbook of the Agency for International Development states, because of "the danger that Jordan's dismemberment might produce violence throughout the area."

Military aid for Jordan compares with $27.6 million for Israel, all in credit assistance to help Israel buy arms.

Saudi Arabia has received $161.7 million in military assistance against $47.4 of economic aid. But 60 per cent of the total has been in the form of loans or credits.

Only $100,000 of the $73.3 million aid total for Syria has been for military purposes and more than one-half has been in loans.

All of the $41.8 million for Yemen has been outright gifts, with less than $50,000 alloted for military aid. U.S. aid to Yemen ended this spring, after the state arrested two American officials, who later were released on bail and then left the country.

Egypt has some of her best troops in Yemen, which has received an estimated $140 million in economic and defense support assistance from Red China and the Soviet Union since 1957.

The United States has aided Egypt to the tune of $1.13 billion — or more than half the total assistance to the Arab states of the Middle East.

All of this aid has been economic, and most has gone to Egypt through the Food for Peace program. Sale in Egypt of this food, mostly grains, has in turn generated local currency loans to the government of President Gamal Abdel Nasser and lesser amounts to Egyptian private industry.

As in many countries, these loans are repaid or credited to the account of the United States in local currencies and do not come back to Washington in the form of dollars.

Food shipments to Egypt ceased last June, but technical assistance valued at about $1.4 million continues. Also still under way is a $9.5-million program of feeding people, conducted through voluntary agencies working with the U.S. government.

UNITED ARAB REPUBLIC PRESIDENT GAMAL ABDEL NASSER'S eldest son, Abdel Hamid (left), 16, takes rifle practice with the Futewa Youth Organization in Heliopolis, Cairo. President Nasser said in a speech that "our main objective will be the destruction of Israel."

Blast Kills Buttler Man

BUTLER, Mo. (AP) — A Butler man was killed early Saturday in a mysterious dynamite explosion in a car in which he and a companion were riding.

Eddie Galloway, 20, a service station attendant, died in a hospital shortly after the blast. The car was leaving a filling station to enter U.S. 71 as the blast occurred.

The driver, Ellis L. McElwain, 17, also of Butler, sufered severe burns.

Herb Adams, chief of police, said it apeared that Galloway was holding the two sticks of dynamite in his lap when they exploded.

How they were set off is not known. Officers said there was a possibility they may have been detonated by static electricity from a two-way radio on a train that was switching cars a block away.

Adams said two more sticks of dynamite and more than 25 blasting caps were found in the back seat of the car. He said eight more sticks of the explosive were found later in Galloway's car, parked in a car wash about five blocks from the blast scene.

Bill Coke, attendant at the service station neac the blast site, said the two drove into the station about 2:30 a.m. and asked for some adhesive tape. He wad none but gave the two some string. He said the two drove off and as the car was making a left turn onto the highway the blast ripped the vehicle. The explosion blew out the windows, damaged the dashboard, blew away the interior roof upholstery and blew a hole in the seat.

Officers said they would question McElwain about the dynamite and what the two had planned to do with it.

Hoover Letter Text Released

WASHINGTON -- U.S. Sen. Edward V. Long (D-Missouri) today released the text of a letter from FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover which, Long said, "answers better than I can whether my fight against invasion of privacy is blunting the organized crime drive."

In the letter Hoover says, "I am certainly in accord with the objectives of your Committee to establish safeguards and proper controls which will preclude the uncontrolled and indiscriminate use of "wiretapping and eavesdropping.

Senator Long said, "There is no one in the country who can better inform us as to the fight against crime than Director Hoover."

The Senator added he had had complete cooperation from both the Justice Department and the FBI. Both of them had supplied all information sought by the subcommittee.

He said that much of this information had not been placed in the public record because of security considerations.

The text;

"I would like to express, on behalf of my associates and myself, our appreciation for the close examination which you and your staff made of our procedures concerning the use of electronic listening devices in connection with our investigative operations.

"Your inquiries in this regard were certainly marked by complete objectivity and fairness in developing a full and complete picture of our use of these techniques.

"As you well know from these exhaustive studies, as well as conferences with our representatives, both at Federal Bureau of Investigation headquarters and in Senate offices, the Federal Bureau of Investigation's policies and procedures throughout the years have been such as to completely preclude any uncontrolled or unwarranted use of such devices.

"As you have determined in your penetrative inquiry, we have restricted and limited the use of these techniques to only the most serious situations involving the national security and the investigations of heinous crimes wherein human life and the welfare of our citizens are at stake, and in conspiracies and the atrocious crimes of violence perpetrated or plotted by key hoodlum leaders of the organized underworld. With respect to wire tapping, this technique has only been utilized in situations involving the national security and in kidnapping and extortion investigations. These policies and procedures have, of course, been approved by various Attorneys General down through the years.

"All of us consider it a welcome opportunity to have had the privilege of working with you and your staff. I am certainly in accord with the objectives of your Committee to establish safeguards and proper controls which will preclude the uncontrolled and indiscriminate use of these investigative techniques.

"We consider the searching inquiries made by you completely justified and, therefore, we were happy to submit our procedures for your close scrutiny. It has been a pleasure to have been of service to you in this connection."

Lack of Response To Pollution Cleanup

JEFFERSON CITY (AP)— A lack of replies to a questionnaire sent to firms in the Kansas City area may lead to more stringent action by the Missouri Air Conservation Commission.

E.F. Porter Jr., executive secretary of the state's air pollution control agency, said about 700 of the detailed questionnaires were mailed April 24 but the response has een only about 20 per cent.

The agency is working with the U.S. Public Health Service and local agencies to conduct an inventory of sorces in the metropolitan area as part of a comprehensive air pollution survey.

Porter said an attempt is being made now by telephone to gain the voluntary cooperation of firms which have not yet responded.

He said if theis proves unsuccessful, the commission will consider further action at its next meeting tentatively set for June 28 in Kansas City.

Grabers Prepare For Action Sale

MEMPHIS - "We're taking action. Action to lower the cost of living."

This is the way Sam Graber, president of Grabers, described his firm's 48th Anniversary Action Sale that starts Wednesday.

"That's why we decided to cal it the Action Sale," he said. "We know that our customers want somebody to do something about prices. But, we also know that nobody wants lower quality with lower prices. We have combined quality with lower prices to make this the biggest sale in our 48-year history," Graber continued.

"Events such as this have been nstrumental in our growing from one small store in Cardwell, Missouri, to one of the largest groups of stores based in the mid-south," stated Graber.

There are 27 Graber stores in Missouri, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas. With headquarters in Memphis, the firm has continued to be owned and operated by the Graber family. Today, the third generation of the family is actively engaged in the operation of the company.

Milton Bernstein is manager of the Sikeston, Mo., Graber store.

A feature event of the Action Sale is the free Ford Mustang that will be given away. "Just register in the store. Nothing to buy, no letters to write or anything else. It's that simple," stated Bernstein.

Skeleton of Indian Unearthed

NEOSHO, Mo. (AP) — The skeleton of an Indian has been unearthed by Jack Ingram on a hill behind his home at Ritchey, Mo.

The body had been buried with the knees drawn up a common practice among early cultures. Near the skull were 17 small, perfect arrow points and a small collection of snail shells. The skull had been crushed, but the upper and lower jaws and the teeth in them were intact.

Not all of the skeleton has been uncovered. The Missouri Archeological Society is to send an expert to complete the job.

Ingram said he discovered the remains about 20 inches below the surface.

At an exclusive resort, a porter brought down the luggage for a nicely dressed old gentleman and stowed it into his Cadillac. The old gentleman, about to give the porter a tip, asked him if he could change a dollar. "Around here," said the porter, "A dollar is change." Mrs. H. Priday.

Are You Running With Me?

THE OTHER DAY we found ourselves in a part of the city we had not visited for some time. Coming up out of the subway, we thought that surely we had made a mistake. Where the old White Tower coffee stand had been, there was a huge, block-long office building. The antique furniture shop which had stood on the opposite corner for 75 years or more was gone, and in its place soared a vast luxury apartment building. Gone were the little clustering shops --the grocer's, the cobbler's, the candy store -- and the long, long rows of last century tenements -- all gone, and their inhabitants as well.

How swiftly change comes now. Fifty years ago the cycles turned so slowly that we hardly realized gradual change. Now we can scarcely keep peace mentally, physically or spiritually, and because we seem to be geared to the maintenance of the status quo, we resist change, fiercely and stubbornly.

It is not only in great cities that changes are to be found. One need only glance through any of the foremost religious magazines to realize that profound changes are taking place in religious thought.

Such headlines as "Is Religion Adequate for the Times?" "In Defense of the Resurrection," "Is God Really Dead?" and "God Versus Science," surely indicate that there is within the Church itself a deep spirit of questioning concern as it seeks ways and means of making the message clear and plain within the framework of today's life and thought.

It is important to note that these are not the questions of the unbeliever, the non-churchgoer of the agnostic. They are being asked by the clergy and the laity, by Salvation Army officers and soldiers, by men and women actively and urgently seeking to relate the gospel to the whole of 20th century living.

We are painfull aware that the church has for a long time not been "speaking to the condition of men." Beautiful and meaningful as they are to the believer, the majestic phrases of the King James Version of the Bible are only meaningless jargon to one hearing them for the first time. The young Salvationist whose oral witness is expressed in the language of 19th century Methodism will be neither understood nor tolerated by today's youth.

"Are You Running With Me, Jesus?" is the somewhat shocking title of a book of "pop" prayers compiled by an Anglican clergyman for teen-age members of his congregation. Here is the first prayer:

"It's morning, Jesus. I've got to move fast -- get washed, grab a bite to eat and rush some more. Where am I running? You know these things I can't understand. It's not that I need to have you tell me. What counts most is just that someone knows, and it's you. That helps me. So I'll follow along, okey? But lead, Lord. Now I've got to run. Are you running with me, Jesus?"

Are you shocked? Don't be. This is the heart to heart conversation of a teen-age boy with his Lord. He has found a Friend and a Brother, and he is communicating as he runs.

It might even be that he is getting through to God, and God is getting through to him, better than one who kneels and utters carefully formulated prayers in impeccable 17th Century English with no real intent of soul.

You will address God always as Thou, and your soul will be refreshed and blessed as you read the loved verses of the King James Version. But do not withhold your understanding and your blessing from those who, like Jesus Himself in His day, seek by desperate means to tell the good news of God in the language of the age in which they live. Brigadier Christine E. McMillan.

CHAR-BROILED BEEF

It's time to bring out the barbecue grill, put on the charcoal and treat your family to summertime cookout fun.

Memorial Day is an excellent time to begin, June's National Barbecue Month, and Dad can be "Chef for a Day" come June 18 - Father's Day.

Appropriately, beef, an all-time barbecue favorite is in good supply right now. In fact, it has been on the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Plentiful Foods List since April.

USDA reports that federally inspected beef production during the first quarter of 1967 is seven percent greater than last year's record large amount for the same period.

With all that beef, many of the best barbecuing cuts should be reasonably priced. Ground beef and beef cubes for shish kebabs will be particular favorites. But don't forget tantalizing porterhouse, T-bone, sirloin, rib-eye or strip steaks. Of course, barbecued filet mignon makes mighty fine eating, while top round steak, marinated, then broiled, can make taste buds sit up and take notice. Rolled rib and high quality rolled rump roasts as well as tenderloin also make suitable barbeque fare.

U.S. Prime and U.S. Choice grade beef is recommended for barbecuing says USDA's Consumer and Marketing Service. Cuts from these grades are larger, have more marbling for tenderness, and, in general, make for more tasty eating.

Plan to combine beef and charcoal for your family - soon!

SOUND ADVICE FROM A SOPRANO — "You'll be adding red, white and blue notes to your financial range when you sign up for U.S. Savings Bonds," says Olivia Bonelli, lyric soprano star of opera, oratorio and concert. "Buy them through Payroll Savings where you work or on the Bond-A-Month Plan where you bank."

Blast Kills Buttler Man

BUTLER, Mo. (AP) — A Butler man was killed early Saturday in a mysterious dynamite explosion in a car in which he and a companion were riding.

Eddie Galloway, 20, a service station attendant, died in a hospital shortly after the blast. The car was leaving a filling station to enter U.S. 71 as the blast occurred.

The driver, Ellis L. McElwain, 17, also of Butler, sufered severe burns.

Herb Adams, chief of police, said it apeared that Galloway was holding the two sticks of dynamite in his lap when they exploded.

How they were set off is not known. Officers said there was a possibility they may have been detonated by static electricity from a two-way radio on a train that was switching cars a block away.

Adams said two more sticks of dynamite and more than 25 blasting caps were found in the back seat of the car. He said eight more sticks of the explosive were found later in Galloway's car, parked in a car wash about five blocks from the blast scene.

Bill Coke, attendant at the service station neac the blast site, said the two drove into the station about 2:30 a.m. and asked for some adhesive tape. He wad none but gave the two some string. He said the two drove off and as the car was making a left turn onto the highway the blast ripped the vehicle. The explosion blew out the windows, damaged the dashboard, blew away the interior roof upholstery and blew a hole in the seat.

Officers said they would question McElwain about the dynamite and what the two had planned to do with it.

Lack of Response To Pollution Cleanup

JEFFERSON CITY (AP)— A lack of replies to a questionnaire sent to firms in the Kansas City area may lead to more stringent action by the Missouri Air Conservation Commission.

E.F. Porter Jr., executive secretary of the state's air pollution control agency, said about 700 of the detailed questionnaires were mailed April 24 but the response has een only about 20 per cent.

The agency is working with the U.S. Public Health Service and local agencies to conduct an inventory of sorces in the metropolitan area as part of a comprehensive air pollution survey.

Porter said an attempt is being made now by telephone to gain the voluntary cooperation of firms which have not yet responded.

He said if theis proves unsuccessful, the commission will consider further action at its next meeting tentatively set for June 28 in Kansas City.

Grabers Prepare For Action Sale

MEMPHIS - "We're taking action. Action to lower the cost of living."

This is the way Sam Graber, president of Grabers, described his firm's 48th Anniversary Action Sale that starts Wednesday.

"That's why we decided to cal it the Action Sale," he said. "We know that our customers want somebody to do something about prices. But, we also know that nobody wants lower quality with lower prices. We have combined quality with lower prices to make this the biggest sale in our 48-year history," Graber continued.

"Events such as this have been nstrumental in our growing from one small store in Cardwell, Missouri, to one of the largest groups of stores based in the mid-south," stated Graber.

There are 27 Graber stores in Missouri, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas. With headquarters in Memphis, the firm has continued to be owned and operated by the Graber family. Today, the third generation of the family is actively engaged in the operation of the company.

Milton Bernstein is manager of the Sikeston, Mo., Graber store.

A feature event of the Action Sale is the free Ford Mustang that will be given away. "Just register in the store. Nothing to buy, no letters to write or anything else. It's that simple," stated Bernstein.

Skeleton of Indian Unearthed

NEOSHO, Mo. (AP) — The skeleton of an Indian has been unearthed by Jack Ingram on a hill behind his home at Ritchey, Mo.

The body had been buried with the knees drawn up a common practice among early cultures. Near the skull were 17 small, perfect arrow points and a small collection of snail shells. The skull had been crushed, but the upper and lower jaws and the teeth in them were intact.

Not all of the skeleton has been uncovered. The Missouri Archeological Society is to send an expert to complete the job.

Ingram said he discovered the remains about 20 inches below the surface.

At an exclusive resort, a porter brought down the luggage for a nicely dressed old gentleman and stowed it into his Cadillac. The old gentleman, about to give the porter a tip, asked him if he could change a dollar. "Around here," said the porter, "A dollar is change."

Are You Running With Me?

THE OTHER DAY we found ourselves in a part of the city we had not visited for some time. Coming up out of the subway, we thought that surely we had made a mistake. Where the old White Tower coffee stand had been, there was a huge, block-long office building. The antique furniture shop which had stood on the opposite corner for 75 years or more was gone, and in its place soared a vast luxury apartment building. Gone were the little clustering shops --the grocer's, the cobbler's, the candy store -- and the long, long rows of last century tenements -- all gone, and their inhabitants as well.

How swiftly change comes now. Fifty years ago the cycles turned so slowly that we hardly realized gradual change. Now we can scarely keep peace mentally, physically or spiritually, and because we seem to be geared to the maintenance of the status quo, we resist change, fiercely and stubbornly.

It is not only in great cities that changes are to be found. One need only glance through any of the foremost religious magazines to realize that profound changes are taking place in religious thought.

Such headlines as "Is Religion Adequate for the Times?" "In Defense of the Resurrection," "Is God Really Dead?" and "God Versus Science," surely indicate that there is within the Church itself a deep spirit of questioning concern as it seeks ways and means of making the message clear and plain within the framework of today's life and thought.

It is important to note that these are not the questions of the unbeliever, the non-churchgoer of the agnostic. They are being asked by the clergy and the laity, by Salvation Army officers and soldiers, by men and women actively and urgently seeking to relate the gospel to the whole of 20th century living.

We are painfull aware that the church has for a long time not been "speaking to the condition of men." Beautiful and meaningful as they are to the believer, the majestic phrases of the King James Version of the Bible are only meaningless jargon to one hearing them for the first time. The young Salvationist whose oral witness is expressed in the language of 19th century Methodism will be neither understood nor tolerated by today's youth.

"Are You Running With Me, Jesus?" is the somewhat shocking title of a book of "pop" prayers compiled by an Anglican clergyman for teen-age members of his congregation. Here is the first prayer:

"It's morning, Jesus. I've got to move fast -- get washed, grab a bite to eat and rush some more. Where am I running? You know these things I can't understand. It's not that I need to have you tell me. What counts most is just that someone knows, and it's you. That helps me. So I'll follow along, okey? But lead, Lord. Now I've got to run. Are you running with me, Jesus?"

Are you shocked? Don't be. This is the heart to heart conversation of a teen-age boy with his Lord. He has found a Friend and a Brother, and he is communicating as he runs.

It might even be that he is getting through to God, and God is getting through to him, better than one who kneels and utters carefully formulated prayers in impeccable 17th Century English with no real intent of soul.

You will address God always as Thou, and your soul will be refreshed and blessed as you read the loved verses of the King James Version. Hoover Letter Text Released

WASHINGTON -- U.S. Sen. Edward V. Long (D-Missouri) today released the text of a letter from FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover which, Long said, "answers better than I can whether my fight against invasion of privacy is blunting the organized crime drive."

In the letter Hoover says, "I am certainly in accord with the objectives of your Committee to establish safeguards and proper controls which will preclude the uncontrolled and indiscriminate use of "wiretapping and eavesdropping.

Senator Long said, "There is no one in the country who can better inform us as to the fight against crime than Director Hoover."

The Senator added he had had complete cooperation from both the Justice Department and the FBI. Both of them had supplied all information sought by the subcommittee.

He said that much of this information had not been placed in the public record because of security considerations.

The text;

"I would like to express, on behalf of my associates and myself, our appreciation for the close examination which you and your staff made of our procedures concerning the use of electronic listening devices in connection with our investigative operations.

"Your inquiries in this regard were certainly marked by complete objectivity and fairness in developing a full and complete picture of our use of these techniques.

"As you well know from these exhaustive studies, as well as conferences with our representatives, both at Federal Bureau of Investigation headquarters and in Senate offices, the Federal Bureau of Investigation's policies and procedures throughout the years have been such as to completely preclude any uncontrolled or unwarranted use of such devices.

"As you have determined in your penetrative inquiry, we have restricted and limited the use of these techniques to only the most serious situations involving the national security and the investigations of heinous crimes wherein human life and the welfare of our citizens are at stake, and in conspiracies and the atrocious crimes of violence perpetrated or plotted by key hoodlum leaders of the organized underworld. With respect to wire tapping, this technique has only been utilized in situations involving the national security and in kidnapping and extortion investigations. These policies and procedures have, of course, been approved by various Attorneys General down through the years.

"All of us consider it a welcome opportunity to have had the privilege of working with you and your staff. I am certainly in accord with the objectives of your Committee to establish safeguards and proper controls which will preclude the uncontrolled and indiscriminate use of these investigative techniques.

"We consider the searching inquiries made by you completely justified and, therefore, we were happy to submit our procedures for your close scrutiny. It has been a pleasure to have been of service to you in this connection."

THE USS ST. FRANCIS RIVER has celebrated its first year on the Vietnam gunline.

USS St. Francis on Vietnam Gunline

The USS St. Francis River celebrated its first year on the Vietnam gunline by firing 25,000th five inch spin stabilized rocket in support of the third brigade, 25th Army infantry division operation Oregon, 25 miles southeast of Quang Ngai City, I Corps.

Lacking only 41 rounds for the magic number, the plotting room team took special care in plotting a fast solution for the airborne Anglico navel gunfire spotter. The launcher crews loaded the hand painted rockets emblazed with "Sat Cong," the ship's motto. At the command "fire," the special "stanley steamers", which have struck justifiable fear in the ranks of the Viet Cong, were on their way.

At the same time the ship unlimbered her secondary 5"/38 and 40MM batteries on two separate enemy fortified positions. All rounds blanketed the three targets. Before the final "cease fire" gave the launchers and guns a chance to cool, the ship fired over 400 rockets, and more than 1500 rounds of 5"/38 and 40MM projectiles.

The enemy did not enjoy the anniversary celebration. Covering eight targets, 120 structures, 18 sampans and trench lines were destroyed. The enemy took 30 killed in the action by body count.

The St. Francis River, nicknamed the "Rocket Rainmaker", fired the first rocket mission since the Korean War, just one year before only a few miles North along the coast. Operating in support of every national force in Vietnam, from the DMZ to the rivers of the Mekong Delta, the ship has accounted for over 1000 confirmed enemy casualties and over 5000 structures destroyed or damaged.

Named for the Missouri - Arkansas River which flows south to the Mississippi, the St. Francis River is sponsored by the city of Poplar Bluff. The Pacific amphibious force "Ship of the Year", she was named 4th runnerup in a Navy-wide selection for the same honor.

A veteran of numerous engagements and bombardments in the Korean War, the St. Francis River has been commanded by Lt. Frederick N. Mangol of Detroit, since her reactivation from the mothball fleet in 1965.

The Mason - Dixon Line was drawn in 1767 to end a bitter colonial land dispute. It extends from east to west between Pennsylvania and Maryland, with a shorter branch reaching southward then east between Maryland and Delaware. All three states were on the Union side during the Civil War.

Bullet Grazes Motorist's Head

ST. LOUIS (AP) — A motorist was shot today and a city ordinance wihich allows right turns on red traffic signals in some sections of the city was apparently involved.

One area where the right turn on red is not allowed is in the downtown St. Louis area.

Clark Fisher, 37, was driving downtown early today with his wife and two friends. He stopped for a red light and didn't move when a driver behind him honked his horn enthusiastically.

When the light turned green there was an exhange of words between the two cars followed by several shots from the second car, police said.

Fisher's passengers ducke excaped injury but a bullet grazed the side of his head. He was treated for a superficial wound. The other driver quickly left the area.

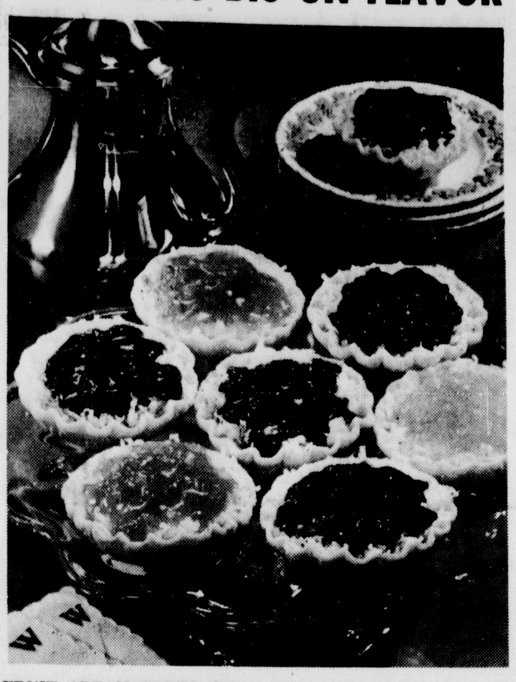
TINY TARTS BIG ON FLAVOR



FRUIT CREAM TARTS. Pretty party tarts are easy to make with mixes and preserves. In the tarts, made from pastry mix, is vanilla pudding also made from a mix, topped with different color and flavor preserves and a sprinkle of flaked coconut.

These Fruit Cream Tarts look so elegant they spell p-a-r-t-y, but they're quick and easy to make if you start out with tarts made from a pie crust mix. Underneath the luscious preserve topping is a creamy vanilla pudding made from an instant pudding mix, and around the preserves is flaked coconut.

Serve them on your most elegant glass or silverware with hot, very black coffee and your guests will be delighted with these pretty little pastries.

For added color appeal, vary the preserves you use from yellow-orange (marmalade, apricot, peach, or pineapple preserves) to red or purple (strawberry, raspberry, or grape jelly or preserves).

FRUIT CREAM TARTS

- 1 package (3¾ ounce) vanilla instant pudding mix
- Milk
- 1 cup flaked coconut
- 8 to 12 baked tart shells (about 3½ inch diameter)
- 1 jar (12 ounce) favorite preserves or marmalade or favorite assortment of preserves

Prepare pudding mix with milk as directed on package. Let thicken slightly. Fill tart shells ⅔ full with pudding mix. Sprinkle 1 to 2 tablespoons coconut over pudding. Chill until pudding is set. Spoon preserves or marmalade over coconut and pudding. Yield: 8 to 12 tarts.

A "Husband-Winning" Dessert

Can she bake a cherry pie? Tradition has it that an affirmative answer to this question is the mark of a marriageable girl. If you have trouble producing a "husband-catching pie", then try this Deep Dish Cherry Pudding. It's absolutely error proof and so yummy he'll never notice that it's not "pie shaped".

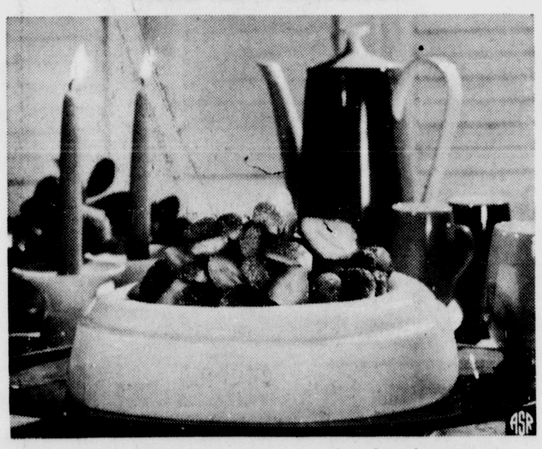
The crust is a flavorful combination of crushed cookies and spices and canned cherry pie filling which eliminates the tricky cooking of cherries.

Deep Dish Cherry Pudding

- 1 (10-ounce) package LORNA DOONE Shortbread, finely rolled
- 1½ teaspoons ground cinnamon
- ½ teaspoon ground allspice
- 1 teaspoon grated lemon rind
- 2 (1 pound, 6 ounce) cans cherry pie filling
- ¼ cup chopped walnuts
- Whipped cream or ice cream

Combine the first three ingredients. Reserve ⅔ cup for topping. Spoon remaining into a buttered 8-inch square cake pan. Press firmly against bottom with back of a spoon. Stir lemon rind into cherry pie filling. Spoon over crust. Toss nuts with reserved crumb mixture; sprinkle over top. Bake in a preheated moderate oven (350° F.) 30 to 35 minutes. Serve warm or cooled. Top with sweetened whipped heavy cream or ice cream if desired. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Peak Of Perfection



It's hard to find a dessert more popular than fragrant strawberries, luscious in their juicy sweetness. There just never seems to be quite enough of them to really satisfy the craving! However, there are some delicious ways to extend strawberries without masking their incomparable flavor. One of the most delectable of these is Cream Cheese Halo with Strawberries. It's a smooth, cloud-light mold characterized by the delicate piquancy of cream cheese—a perfect medium to set off the rich taste and color of the fruit. It's pretty enough for parties but so simple to prepare that you'll want to feature it on family menus, too, to take full advantage of strawberries at their quality peak.

Cream Cheese Halo With Strawberries

- 1 envelope unflavored gelatin
- ¼ cup cold water
- 1 8-oz. pkg. cream cheese
- ½ cup sugar
- ½ teaspoon almond extract
- Dash of salt
- 1¼ cups milk
- 1 cup heavy cream, whipped
- 1 pint strawberries

Soften gelatin in cold water; dissolve over hot water. Combine softened cream cheese, sugar, almond extract and salt, mixing until well blended. Gradually add milk and gelatin. Chill until slightly thickened. Fold in whipped cream; pour into a 1-quart ring mold; chill until firm. Unmold; fill center with strawberries.

FRUIT CREAM TARTS. Pretty party tarts are easy to make with mixes and preserves. In the tarts, made from pastry mix, is vanilla pudding also made from a mix, topped with different color and flavor preserves and a sprinkle of flaked coconut.

These Fruit Cream Tarts look so elegant they spell p-a-r-t-y, but they're quick and easy to make if you start out with tarts made from a pie crust mix. Underneath the luscious preserve topping is a creamy vanilla pudding made from an instant pudding mix, and around the preserves is flaked coconut.

Serve them on your most elegant glass or silverware with hot, very black coffee and your guests will be delighted with these pretty little pastries.

For added color appeal, vary the preserves you use from yellow-orange (marmalade, apricot, peach, or pineapple preserves) to red or purple (strawberry, raspberry, or grape jelly or preserves).

- 1 package (3¾ ounce) vanilla instant pudding mix
- Milk
- 1 cup flaked coconut
- 8 to 12 baked tart shells (about 3½ inch diameter)
- 1 jar (12 ounce) favorite preserves or marmalade or favorite assortment of preserves

Prepare pudding mix with milk as directed on package. Let thicken slightly. Fill tart shells ⅔ full with pudding mix. Sprinkle 1 to 2 tablespoons coconut over pudding. Chill until pudding is set. Spoon preserves or marmalade over coconut and pudding. Yield: 8 to 12 tarts.

Hot Sandwich Takes Ham, Sauce Cornbread Base

You can make it ham on rye with plenty of mustard if you want a sandwich cold, but if you like one that's warm make it ham in creamy mushroom sauce on cornbread squares!

With ham so popular in sandwiches, wise homemakers usually purchase a half or whole ham in a size larger than for the group expected for dinner, explains Neba Staggs, meat expert.

With this amount of ham, it's easy to obtain leftover slices for sandwiches to be served, either hot or cold, at the first meal after the main dinner. After the slices, there remain pieces to use in casseroles or creamed dishes. Should it be a bone-in type of ham, this could be used for soup with green or yellow split peas. All in all, ham can come to several meals, each time in a different guise.

Cornbread is a quick and easy recipe to make for a sandwich with milk and beaten egg added to dry ingredients along with lard to make it tender. The batter should not be overmixed.

Southern Ham Sandwich

8 slices cooked ham, warmed
1 can (10½ ounces) condensed mushroom soup
½ cup milk
½ teaspoon onion juice
⅛ cup cooked peas
8 cornbread squares

Combine condensed mushroom soup, milk and onion juice. Add cooked peas and heat thoroughly. Top each cornbread square with a slice of ham. Spoon mushroom soup mixture over ham allowing about ¼ cup for each sandwich. 8 servings.

Cornbread

1 egg
1¼ cups milk
¼ cup sifted flour
1¼ cups corn meal
2 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons lard, melted

Beat egg until thick and lemon colored. Add milk, dry ingredients and lard. Beat until smooth. Pour into greased 8x8-inch pan. Bake in a hot oven (400° F.) 25 to 30 minutes. Cut cornbread into 4x4-inch pieces. Remove from pan and split each piece in half making 8 cornbread squares.

Ginger Seasons Tasty Beef Cut Called Brisket

Fresh beef brisket makes pot-roast when it's braised. It will seem related to a famous dish called sauerbraten when spices like ginger and cloves season it.

Much of the beef brisket that's sold is cured and goes under the name of "corned beef." It has characteristic flavor and color (bright red), when cooked. Brisket which is not cured is the same boneless cut, points out meat authority, Reba Staggs, but is dipped in seasoned flour before browning and cooked by moist heat.

Beef Brisket — Ginger Gravy

3 to 4 pound beef brisket
¼ cup flour
2 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon ginger
¼ teaspoon ground cloves
¼ teaspoon thyme
3 tablespoons lard or drippings
½ cup water
2 tablespoons lemon juice
3 medium onions, sliced
¾-inch thick
¼ to ½ cup water

Combine flour, salt, pepper, ginger, cloves and thyme. Dredge brisket in seasoned flour. Save remaining flour for thickening gravy. Brown brisket on all sides in lard or drippings. Pour off drippings. Add ½ cup water, lemon juice and sliced onions. Cover tightly and cook slowly 3 to 3½ hours or until tender. Remove brisket and measure cooking liquid. Add water to cooking liquid to make 3 cups. Thicken with remaining seasoned flour to which ¼ to ½ cup water is added to make a smooth liquid. Add flour mixture to cooking liquid. Cook, stirring constantly, until boiled and thickened. Serve with brisket.

Boost for Breakfast

Here's something different to do with scrambled eggs for a first meal of the day: cream a (3 ounce) package of cream cheese until fluffy, then add slowly a cup of scalded milk. Season with salt and pepper. Add 6 eggs which have been beaten slightly. Melt lard or drippings in frying-pan, then add 1 cup cubed leftover ham or luncheon meat to cook with the eggs. Cook slowly stirring only until eggs are set.

This ham and egg breakfast dish is delightful served with toasted English muffin, cinnamon buns or toast.

Garnish for Ham or Pork

Make kabobs of cooked or canned sweet potatoes, alternating them with pineapple chunks and maraschino cherries. Brush with melted butter or margarine and let bake during the last 10 minutes of roasting time. Serve on the same platter with baked ham or pork roast.

Food for Americans

Add Lemon Butter To New Potatoes

By GAYNOR MADDOX
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

New potatoes, one of the joys of spring, need nothing more than a touch of salt and a little butter. But now and then, just for a change, serve them with butter sauces for an extra fillip.

BOILED NEW POTATOES WITH BUTTER SAUCE

1½ pounds new potatoes
Butter sauce
1 teaspoon salt

Wash potatoes, scrape or pare or, if desired, cook in jackets. Place in saucepan with an inch of boiling water and salt. Cover and bring to boiling point. Boil until tender, 25 to 40 minutes, depending on size. Drain until dry and serve plain with butter and black pepper to taste or with one of the following sauces. Makes 6 servings.

FRESH LEMON BUTTER: Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Add 1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice, ¼ teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon ground black pepper.

HERBED BUTTER: Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine and add ¼ teaspoon crumbled basil leaves, caraway seed, powdered mustard or onion powder.

NEW POTATOES SAUTEED

Wash and scrape 2 pounds small new potatoes. Heat 2 tablespoons salad oil in heavy skillet. Add potatoes, shake pan to coat all sides with oil. Cover and cook slowly over low heat, 30 to 40 minutes or until tender, shaking pan occasionally to cook uniformly. Sprinkle with salt and ground black pepper to taste and chopped fresh parsley or chives. Serve very hot. Makes 6 servings.

Cereal Ice Cream Parfaits

Surveys among homemakers and teen-age girls, who frequently skip or skimp breakfast, reveal that one reason given is "just not hungry in the morning." This is when mom's ingenuity is put to the test.

For example, a basic cereal and milk breakfast is a convenient, adaptable meal which suits the needs of all family members, with little effort. It can be prepared in the time it takes to make the coffee. Yet, when that springtime craving for something different but equally quick to prepare is wanted, Cereal Ice Cream Parfaits offer a delightful solution.

Even teen-agers can take over in preparing such a breakfast. Just spoon crisp, ready-to-eat cereal, such as whole wheat flakes, in parfait glasses, alternating with spoonfuls of vanilla ice cream and sliced, sweetened strawberries. Garnish the tops with a few sliced berries. Add buttered toast, orange juice, and glass of milk for a nutritionally adequate meal.

Hot Sandwich Takes Ham, Sauce Cornbread Base

You can make it ham on rye with plenty of mustard if you want a sandwich cold, but if you like one that's warm make it ham in creamy mushroom sauce on cornbread squares!

8 slices cooked ham, warmed
1 can (10½ ounces) condensed mushroom soup
½ cup milk
¼ teaspoon onion juice
¾ cup cooked peas
8 cornbread squares

Combine condensed mushroom soup, milk and onion juice. Add cooked peas and heat thoroughly. Top each cornbread square with a slice of ham. Spoon mushroom soup mixture over ham allowing about ¼ cup for each sandwich. 8 servings.

Cornbread

1 egg
1¼ cups milk
½ cup sifted flour
1¼ cups corn meal
2 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons lard, melted

Beat egg until thick and lemon colored. Add milk, dry ingredients and lard. Beat until smooth. Pour into greased 8 x 8-inch pan. Bake in a hot oven (400° F.) 25 to 30 minutes. Cut cornbread into 4 x 4-inch pieces. Remove from pan and split each piece in half making 8 cornbread squares.

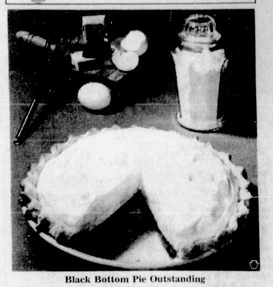
GOLDEN TOUCH OF HOSPITALITY

BY JANE ASHLEY



Black Bottom Pie Outstanding

One of the most elegant desserts you can serve is Black Bottom Pie which consists of a chocolate-flavored bottom layer, topped with a rum-flavored custard layer. The distinctive results are worth extra effort, as it's delicate flavor and texture are sure to reap compliments as you serve it on very special occasions.

Black Bottom Pie

1 baked 9-inch pastry shell
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
¼ cup cold water
1 cup sugar
3 tablespoons corn starch
½ teaspoon salt
2 cups milk
4 egg yolks, slightly beaten
½ cup light rum or orange juice
½ cup light corn syrup
1½ ounces unsweetened chocolate, melted
1 teaspoon vanilla
4 egg whites
½ teaspoon cream of tartar

Sprinkle gelatin over cold water; let soften. Combine ½ cup sugar, corn starch and salt in double boiler top. Gradually add milk, stirring until smooth. Cook over boiling water, stirring constantly, until thickened. Cover; cook 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Meanwhile, prepare pastry. Stir a little hot mixture over boiling water. Cook 2 minutes, stirring occasionally. Remove from boiling water. Measure ¾ cup mixture into large bowl. Blend in softened gelatin, stirring until gelatin is completely dissolved. Mix in rum. Stir corn syrup into remaining custard, then blend in chocolate and vanilla. Pour chocolate custard into pastry shell. Beat egg whites with cream of tartar until soft peaks form when beater is raised. Gradually add remaining ½ cup sugar, beating until stiff peaks form. Fold into rum custard. Pour on top of chocolate custard in pastry shell. Chill.

Food for Americans

Add Lemon Butter To New Potatoes

By GAYNOR MADDOX
Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

New potatoes, one of the joys of spring, need nothing more than a touch of salt and a little butter. But now and then, just for a change, serve them with butter sauces for an extra fillip.

BOILED NEW POTATOES WITH BUTTER SAUCE

1½ pounds new potatoes
1 teaspoon salt
Butter sauce

Wash potatoes, scrape or pare or, if desired, cook in jackets. Place in saucepan with an inch of boiling water and salt. Cover and bring to boiling point. Boil until tender, 25 to 40 minutes, depending on size. Drain until dry and serve plain with butter and black pepper to taste or with one of the following sauces. Makes 6 servings.

FRESH LEMON BUTTER: Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine. Add 1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice, ¼ teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon ground black pepper.

HERBED BUTTER: Melt 2 tablespoons butter or margarine and add ¼ teaspoon crumbled basil leaves, caraway seed, powdered mustard or onion powder.

NEW POTATOES SAUTEED

Wash and scrape 2 pounds small new potatoes. Heat 2 tablespoons salad oil in heavy skillet. Add potatoes, shake pan to coat all sides with oil. Cover and cook slowly over low heat, 30 to 40 minutes or until tender, shaking pan occasionally to cook uniformly. Sprinkle with salt and ground black pepper to taste and chopped fresh parsley or chives. Serve very hot. Makes 6 servings.

Cereal Ice Cream Parfaits

Surveys among homemakers and teen-age girls, who frequently skip or skimp breakfast, reveal that one reason given is "just not hungry in the morning." This is when mom's ingenuity is put to the test.

For example, a basic cereal and milk breakfast is a convenient, adaptable meal which suits the needs of all family members, with little effort. It can be prepared in the time it takes to make the coffee. Yet, when that springtime craving for something different but equally quick to prepare is wanted, Cereal Ice Cream Parfaits offer a delightful solution.

Even teen-agers can take over in preparing such a breakfast. Just spoon crisp, ready-to-eat cereal, such as whole wheat flakes, in parfait glasses, alternating with spoonfuls of vanilla ice cream and sliced, sweetened strawberries. Garnish the tops with a few sliced berries. Add buttered toast, orange juice, and glass of milk for a nutritionally adequate meal.

The Side Of The Angels

By Brigadier Christine E. McMillan (R)

THE MANAGER of the Hoot Owls never knew why he did it. Tommy was the team's worst player. He just came along with the Little League--well, because. He told his mother he wasn't really a player, "just bench strength." And he didn't expect to last long at that.

The Hoot Owls were playing a team from the next town had been a long, hard - fought game, and the score was tied. The next boy in the batting order had just hurt his hand and, looking around wildly, the manager's eyes fell on Tommy. Before either of them quite knew what was happening. Tommy was at bat. And the amazing, totally unexpected home run he hit gave the Hoot Owls the game. "Just bench strength?" said his mother sometime later. "Some bench strength!"

Most of us, come right down to it, are just bench strength. We feel sometimes that our voices count very little in the affairs of the world or of our communities.

We are the mothers, perhaps, who feel somewhat "out of it" as the world rushes by the front door while we bind up Johnny's knee, take Susie to the dentist, stretch the budget another inch or seek to comfort a neighbor.

We are the average men and women of the world, living out our lives with what courage and fortitude we can summon, participating in the life of the community, sharing in the corporate life of the Church, and trying to know God's way for us, and through Him to come to terms with our own spirit.

But are we just "bench strength?" Just those who sit on the sidelines of life? Just "waiters" for a chance to make some spectacular play? No, indeed not! We are those upon whom the world depends. When the challenge is thrown down in a day of crisis, it is we who can choose whether we shall accept it in righteousness, or neglect it to our ruin. When the unworthy, the base and the corrupt confront us, and ours is the choice, we, the people, have the right to choose "which side shall feel the stubborn ounces of our weight." There are the leaders, of course. There are the wise and the great and the mighty. But they would fade away and be no more were it not for the rest of us who make it possible for them to lead.

None of us who should ever feel that any effort we make toward the betterment of an individual, the community, or the world at large is of no avail. Every child that is loved and cherished, every lonely spirit cheered, every downcast and discouraged husband uplifted and strengthened, every woman who knows she is loved and understood, every lesson of truth and goodness taught and learned, every act of self-denial and love -- every one of these efforts, added to the sum total of human endeavor, is vital and all - important.

And even at the spirit's lowest ebb, when we might truly feel that our efforts have failed or are of little value, we can still say, with Bonaro W. Overstreet:

"You say the little efforts that I make
Will do no good.
They never will prevail,
To tip the hovering scale
Where justice hangs in balance.
I don't think
I ever thought they would.
But I am prejudiced beyond debate
In favor of my right to choose which side
Shall feel the stubborn ounces of my weight."

It's one thing to be neutral; it's another to be on the side of the angels where all of our efforts are enlarged and multiplied as God uses them to work out His own will and purpose in the world.

THE PERFECT ASSIST

When my mother came to northern Alberta from the green shores of Ireland, she felt the cold. A trapper friend of my father's saved special unusually fine skins to make a beautiful coat for the young bride. She wore it proudly for years.

Then our family moved to the warm, pleasant climate of Vancouver, B. C. My mother treasured the coat as a memory -- but she didn't really need it. A few months before the Hungarian revolt of 1956 she sent it to the Red Cross, fastening into the pocket a note requesting the future owner to give her a few details about the much - prized coat. A year passed, and my mother heard nothing. She thought the coat had been lost or stolen along the way. Then came a letter, in Hungarian, from a priest wanted by the communists. A friend had smuggled in the coat when the borders were relatively unguarded; the priest, dressed as a woman and using the fur coat as a disguise, had escaped to freedom. Meantime, he found the note and had it translated to him. The letter thanked my mother for saving his life.

Prayer Breaks All Chains

by
The Rev. Richard Wurmbrand

Dear brethren, dear sisters, and you very dear children: I will tell you out of my experience something of the value of prayer.

I had been in my youth a militant atheist. I was sure that there was no God; but I saw that my mind very often made mistakes. And I wondered if I was not mistaken in this question.

I was sure that there was no God, but I would have liked very much that there should be a God. I had a bitter childhood, a very difficult youth; and I would have liked that somewhere in the center of this universe a heart should beat lovingly for me.

A convinced atheistic being, I prayed for the first time with the following words: "God, I know surely that you do not exist, but if perchance you exist, which I contest, I speak in madness to a God in whose existence I don't believe. If you exist, it is your duty to reveal yourself to me."

This prayer was answered, I heard afterwards that at the same time, far away in a village high up in the mountains in Rumania, a carpenter who had never seen me prayed, substantially, like this:

"God, I have served Thee on earth, and I wish to have my reward on earth and not in heaven. And my reward should be that I should not die before I bring someone to you. But I am old, too sick and I can't go around and see this particular last soul I seek. In my village there are none of the faith I want to convert to Christianity. Bring one into our village and I will bring him to Christ."

An impulse which I can't explain took me to that village just at that time. I met this carpenter and he brought me to Christ. The prayer of an atheist was fulfilled by God.

And now out of regret for my past atheistic life, I asked God to give me the possibility to atone for it by witnessing for Christ to the Russians who are brought up in atheistic manner. For years I have prayed to witness to the Russians. This prayer has also been fulfilled.

Over a million Russian soldiers occupied our country. We could print secretly -- and distribute among them -- thousands of gospels and other Christian literature. And I must tell you that to preach the gospel to Russians is heaven on earth.

We here in the West are blase. We can yawn while reading about the Passion of Christ. But the Russians absorb the gospel as a sponge. It is thirsty soil. We could baptize Russians; we could bring them to Christ.

So the second great prayer of mine has been fulfilled.

The day that I was ordained as a pastor I made a third prayer to God:

"God, if I am allowed to choose for myself a parish, I would like very much to be pastor of a prison."

This desire also have been fulfilled. I became pastor of a prison because I had to pass many years, first in fascist and then in Communist prisons.

It was really a very beautiful parish. It was not one with great income in money, but God was with us; Christ was with us. And it was an unspeakable joy to be able to preach the gospel by Morse Code through the wall when you were in solitary confinement, and to bring souls to Christ in this manner -- to be able to comfort the dying, tortured prisoners.

For two and a half years I was in the cell of dying ones -- sick ones -- sick myself, very sick. Not one died in this cell without having accepted Christ as his Savior. A third great prayer of mine had been fulfilled.

I have had a fourth great prayer. When I became a pastor I had a very good social position. The only thing which I missed was a cross. When, as often as I got my salary and furniture and all kinds of such things, my wife and I asked:

"God, you give us so many gifts but can't we get a cross from you? We would like that a time should come when you will give us nothing -- that we may be able to show you that we love you and not your gifts."

This prayer also has been fulfilled.

There have been horrible times in Communist prisons, times when Christians were tied to crosses four days and four nights. These crosses were put on the floor and the Christians subjected to indignities which I cannot relate to this (LIFE LINE) radio audience. (For details of Reverend Wurmbrand's 14-year imprisonment and torture by Rumanian Communists -- his own word testimony to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee --see LIFE LINES, Vol. 8, July 8)

The Communists would then hold up the crosses with the crucified prisoners: "Look at your Christ," they would jeer and mock, "See how beautiful He is!"

In those moments I got from God nothing -- and we could love not His gifts but Him during these years. And it was such a strengthening of our faith.

We had in prison a time when we could not pray at all. We were indescribably hungry. We had only one slice of bread a week. We were doped with drugs which broke our wills. We Christian prisoners were beaten and tortured. We could not pray. But when we could not pray any more, then also we knew the power of prayer.

Communists could not conquer us. We felt (as if) a wind were coming to us from far away with the prayers of thousands of faithful Christians who prayed for us when we could not pray.

We could not concentrate, our minds. We were too hungry. But the whole Christian church is one body, and one member of this body takes up the function which the other can't fulfill. We could -- there behind the iron curtain -- suffer for the universal church. Another part of the universal church could pray for us when we were broken down and indescribably weak; we could be strong before our oppressors by the prayers which others offered for us.

I ask you, dear brethren and dear sisters, and specially you very dear children:

Don't forget in your prayers those who suffered behind the iron and bamboo curtains.

Prayer strengthens. Prayer conquers. Prayer helps.

Pray for us as we there behind the iron curtain -- sometimes with 50-pound chains at our feet -- have prayed for you.

Amen.

Prayer Breaks All Chains

by
The Rev. Richard Wurmbrand

Dear brethren, dear sisters, and you very dear children: I will tell you out of my experience something of the value of prayer.

I had been in my youth a militant atheist. I was sure that there was no God; but I saw that my mind very often made mistakes. And I wondered if I was not mistaken in this question.

I was sure that there was no God, but I would have liked very much that there should be a God. I had a bitter childhood, a very difficult youth; and I would have liked that somewhere in the center of this universe a heart should beat lovingly for me.

A convinced atheistic being, I prayed for the first time with the following words: "God, I know surely that you do not exist, but if perchance you exist, which I contest, I speak in madness to a God in whose existence I don't believe. If you exist, it is your duty to reveal yourself to me."

This prayer was answered, I heard afterwards that at the same time, far away in a village high up in the mountains in Rumania, a carpenter who had never seen me prayed, substantially, like this:

"God, I have served Thee on earth, and I wish to have my reward on earth and not in heaven. And my reward should be that I should not die before I bring someone to you. But I am old, too sick and I can't go around and see this particular last soul I seek. In my village there are none of the faith I want to convert to Christianity. Bring one into our village and I will bring him to Christ."

An impulse which I can't explain took me to that village just at that time. I met this carpenter and he brought me to Christ. The prayer of an atheist was fulfilled by God.

And now out of regret for my past atheistic life, I asked God to give me the possibility to atone for it by witnessing for Christ to the Russians who are brought up in atheistic manner. For years I have prayed to witness to the Russians. This prayer has also been fulfilled.

Over a million Russian soldiers occupied our country. We could print secretly -- and distribute among them -- thousands of gospels and other Christian literature. And I must tell you that to preach the gospel to Russians is heaven on earth.

We here in the West are blase. We can yawn while reading about the Passion of Christ. But the Russians absorb the gospel as a sponge. It is thirsty soil. We could baptize Russians; we could bring them to Christ.

So the second great prayer of mine has been fulfilled.

The day that I was ordained as a pastor I made a third prayer to God:

"God, if I am allowed to choose for myself a parish, I would like very much to be pastor of a prison."

This desire also have been fulfilled. I became pastor of a prison because I had to pass many years, first in fascist and then in Communist prisons.

It was really a very beautiful parish. It was not one with great income in money, but God was with us; Christ was with us. And it was an unspeakable joy to be able to preach the gospel by Morse Code through the wall when you were in solitary confinement, and to bring souls to Christ in this manner -- to be able to comfort the dying, tortured prisoners.

For two and a half years I was in the cell of dying ones -- sick ones -- sick myself, very sick. Not one died in this cell without having accepted Christ as his Savior. A third great prayer of mine had been fulfilled.

I have had a fourth great prayer. When I became a pastor I had a very good social position. The only thing which I missed was a cross. When, as often as I got my salary and furniture and all kinds of such things, my wife and I asked:

"God, you give us so many gifts but can't we get a cross from you? We would like that a time should come when you will give us nothing -- that we may be able to show you that we love you and not your gifts."

This prayer also has been fulfilled.

There have been horrible times in Communist prisons, times when Christians were tied to crosses four days and four nights. These crosses were put on the floor and the Christians subjected to indignities which I cannot relate to this (LIFE LINE) radio audience. (For details of Reverend Wurmbrand's 14-year imprisonment and torture by Rumanian Communists -- his own word testimony to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee --see LIFE LINES, Vol. 8, July 8)

The Communists would then hold up the crosses with the crucified prisoners: "Look at your Christ," they would jeer and mock, "See how beautiful He is!"

In those moments I got from God nothing -- and we could love not His gifts but Him during these years. And it was such a strengthening of our faith.

We had in prison a time when we could not pray at all. We were indescribably hungry. We had only one slice of bread a week. We were doped with drugs which broke our wills. We Christian prisoners were beaten and tortured. We could not pray. But when we could not pray any more, then also we knew the power of prayer.

Communists could not conquer us. We felt (as if) a wind were coming to us from far away with the prayers of thousands of faithful Christians who prayed for us when we could not pray.

We could not concentrate, our minds. We were too hungry. But the whole Christian church is one body, and one member of this body takes up the function which the other can't fulfill. We could -- there behind the iron curtain -- suffer for the universal church. Another part of the universal church could pray for us when we were broken down and indescribably weak; we could be strong before our oppressors by the prayers which others offered for us.

I ask you, dear brethren and dear sisters, and specially you very dear children:

Don't forget in your prayers those who suffered behind the iron and bamboo curtains.

Prayer strengthens. Prayer conquers. Prayer helps.

Pray for us as we there behind the iron curtain -- sometimes with 50-pound chains at our feet -- have prayed for you.

Amen.

The Side Of The Angels

By Brigadier Christine E. McMillan (R)

THE MANAGER of the Hoot Owls never knew why he did it. Tommy was the team's worst player. He just came along with the Little League--well, because. He told his mother he wasn't really a player, "just bench strength." And he didn't expect to last long at that.

The Hoot Owls were playing a team from the next town had been a long, hard - fought game, and the score was tied. The next boy in the batting order had just hurt his hand and, looking around wildly, the manager's eyes fell on Tommy. Before either of them quite knew what was happening. Tommy was at bat. And the amazing, totally unexpected home run he hit gave the Hoot Owls the game. "Just bench strength?" said his mother sometime later. "Some bench strength!"

Most of us, come right down to it, are just bench strength. We feel sometimes that our voices count very little in the affairs of the world or of our communities.

We are the mothers, perhaps, who feel somewhat "out of it" as the world rushes by the front door while we bind up Johnny's knee, take Susie to the dentist, stretch the budget another inch or seek to comfort a neighbor.

We are the average men and women of the world, living out our lives with what courage and fortitude we can summon, participating in the life of the community, sharing in the corporate life of the Church, and trying to know God's way for us, and through Him to come to terms with our own spirit.

But are we just "bench strength?" Just those who sit on the sidelines of life? Just "waiters" for a chance to make some spectacular play? No, indeed not! We are those upon whom the world depends. When the challenge is thrown down in a day of crisis, it is we who can choose whether we shall accept it in righteousness, or neglect it to our ruin. When the unworthy, the base and the corrupt confront us, and ours is the choice, we, the people, have the right to choose "which side shall feel the stubborn ounces of our weight." There are the leaders, of course. There are the wise and the great and the mighty. But they would fade away and be no more were it not for the rest of us who make it possible for them to lead.

None of us who should ever feel that any effort we make toward the betterment of an individual, the community, or the world at large is of no avail. Every child that is loved and cherished, every lonely spirit cheered, every downcast and discouraged husband uplifted and strengthened, every woman who knows she is loved and understood, every lesson of truth and goodness taught and learned, every act of self-denial and love -- every one of these efforts, added to the sum total of human endeavor, is vital and all - important.

And even at the spirit's lowest ebb, when we might truly feel that our efforts have failed or are of little value, we can still say, with Bonaro W. Overstreet:

"You say the little efforts that I make
Will do no good.
They never will prevail,
To tip the hovering scale
Where justice hangs in balance.
I don't think
I ever thought they would.
But I am prejudiced beyond debate
In favor of my right to choose which side
Shall feel the stubborn ounces of my weight."

It's one thing to be neutral; it's another to be on the side of the angels where all of our efforts are enlarged and multiplied as God uses them to work out His own will and purpose in the world.

THE PERFECT ASSIST

When my mother came to northern Alberta from the green shores of Ireland, she felt the cold. A trapper friend of my father's saved special unusually fine skins to make a beautiful coat for the young bride. She wore it proudly for years.

Then our family moved to the warm, pleasant climate of Vancouver, B. C. My mother treasured the coat as a memory -- but she didn't really need it. A few months before the Hungarian revolt of 1956 she sent it to the Red Cross, fastening into the pocket a note requesting the future owner to give her a few details about the much - prized coat. A year passed, and my mother heard nothing. She thought the coat had been lost or stolen along the way. Then came a letter, in Hungarian, from a priest wanted by the communists. A friend had smuggled in the coat when the borders were relatively unguarded; the priest, dressed as a woman and using the fur coat as a disguise, had escaped to freedom. Meantime, he found the note and had it translated to him. The letter thanked my mother for saving his life.

"Guns and Butter, Too"

By DAVID LAWRENCE

President Johnson ended two months of quandary and, in his address to Congress, made a fateful decision -- that America can afford "guns and butter, too." He evidently feels that the domestic economy can support a deficits as unprecedented sums are spent for the "Great Society." Will Congress also take that gamble?

The President's statements seemed to reiterate a spending-as - usual policy. He spoke of expensive measures needed to improve "the quality of life" for all Americans, to transform decaying slums, to fight for clean air and water, to help rebuilt our cities, and to beautify America.

Mr. Johnson said that, during the past three years, about 40 billion dollars has been returned to State and local governments in grants - in - aid. He added:

"These enormous sums must be used wisely, honestly, and effectively. We intend to work closely with the States and localities to do exactly that."

Does this mean that the Federal Government is, in effect, to take over the States and use the power of the purse to influence local action?

The President brushed aside any thought of wage - and - price controls. He expressed concern about what he calls "the excessive rise in interest rates and a tightening of credit" which has put burdens on home buyers and home builders. jbut he claimed that price stability has seemingly been restored.

Mr. Johnson urged that our sociological programs at home and American aid abroad be continued. He proposed that, to help pay for these and the higher costs of the Vietnam war, there be a tax increase.

The "surcharge" plan to add 6 per cent to the existing tax bill of the individual or corporation will bring in between 4 and 5 billion dollars a year. But nevertheless fiscal year 1967 will show a deficit of 9.7 billion dollars, and the estimate for 1968 is a deficit of 8.1 billion.

There are critics, including Senator John J. Williams, Republican of Delaware, who say that even these revised estimates do not give a true picture of the deficit spending and that, under customary accounting methods, it would be more accurate to put the 1967 deficit at 18.8 billion dollars.

The economic situation is likely to remain uncertain until the Vietnam war is ended. While increased taxes may be necessary, even more important is a curtailment of expenditures apart from defense.

The President's comments on international problems were pointed. He reviewed developments around the world, and expressed the belief that American policies are making substantial progress. He even took an optimistic view of the relations between the United States and the Soviet Union and Communist - bloc countries of Eastern Europe. He said emphatically: "Our objective is not to continue the cold war, but to end it."

In one part of the message, the President spoke bitterly about Communist aggression, but he somehow ignored this when he advocated new East-West trade agreements. It seems incredible that he would be urging such steps when the Moscow Government is supplying MIGs to the North Vietnamese to kill American boys. The theory presumably is that the Soviets will be persuaded to diminish their aid and eventually to terminate it. This is diplomatic gambling.

The President also deplored the enlargment by the Russians of their missile program and indicated a hope that the Moscow Government can be prevailed upon not to start a new round in the arms race. But should the United States take a big risk in the meantime and sacrifice American security by continuing to spend billions for "butter" that might instead be used to build, for instance, a stronger antimissile defense as recommended unanimously by the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff?

For the danger of a third world war has by no means been lessened. The President said in his message:

"We have chosen to fight a limited war in Vietnam in an attempt to prevent a larger war-a war almost certain to follow, if the Communists succeed in overrunning and taking over South Vietnam by aggression and by force. I believe, and I am supported by some authority, that if they are not checked now, the world can expect to pay a greater price to check them later. . . .

"Our adversary still believes I think, tonight, that he can go on fighting longer than we can, and longer than we and our allies will be prepared to stand up and resist."

The President's words on Vietnam were resolute. Despite the carping comments of ill-informed critics, the American people recognize truth, and realize that the only way by which we can assure the safety of the people of the United States -- and protect them against another war - is to achieve our objectives in Vietnam.

But when will the Administration face the economic facts? Can we today really afford "guns and butter, too"?

"GIVE ME A PLACE TO STAND . . . . . AND I'LL MOVE THE EARTH."

2200 years ago, Archimedes-- the Greek mathematician and practical inventor -- was crying out in frustration. Through the discipline of his studies, he recognized and dabbled as best he could, in the basic principles of many of today's accepted mechanical phenomena. He wished he could do more.

What might he have done with that great servant of today's construction industry -- compressed air? Unknown as a practical thing to the ancients, as a tool it still hadn't been "invented" as late as a mere 200 years ago. Indeed, for 2000 years after Archimedes, practical progress was slow in all fields.

Hamstrung as he was only 200 years ago by the lack of sufficient power where and when he wanted it, the 18th century builder's workshop -- as seen in this sketch -- must have been an inferno. No just from the heat of the open furnace used to soften metals for forming, but from the ear-piercing noise of the crude hammering mechanism driven directly by a water - wheel shaft (Y), the wheezing and blowing of the furnace's bellows, the creaking and groaning of the giant water wheel, the clanging of the four cams on the shaft against the iron band under the hammer (r), the crash of the falling hammer itself, and undoubtedly the cursing of the men when, as often happened, the material to be worked wasn't hot enough or the hammer was too slow.

What would we do today without portable pneumatic tools for chipping, riveting, caulking, rock drilling, concrete breaking, and sand ramming? How well could we get along on our construction sites and in temporary open - air shops without heavy air - powered tools for driving, drilling, reaming, tapping, grinding, buffing, expanding, and cleaning?

We have come a long way since Archimedes -- these last 200 years especially. If he could return to this world, the old Greek would be jealous of the powerful earth- moving and other construction techniques we have at our disposal today.

"Guns and Butter, Too"

By DAVID LAWRENCE

President Johnson ended two months of quandary and, in his address to Congress, made a fateful decision -- that America can afford "guns and butter, too." He evidently feels that the domestic economy can support a deficits as unprecedented sums are spent for the "Great Society." Will Congress also take that gamble?

The President's statements seemed to reiterate a spending-as-usual policy. He spoke of expensive measures needed to improve "the quality of life" for all Americans, to transform decaying slums, to fight for clean air and water, to help rebuilt our cities, and to beautify America.

Mr. Johnson said that, during the past three years, about 40 billion dollars has been returned to State and local governments in grants-in-aid. He added:

"These enormous sums must be used wisely, honestly, and effectively. We intend to work closely with the States and localities to do exactly that."

Does this mean that the Federal Government is, in effect, to take over the States and use the power of the purse to influence local action?

The President brushed aside any thought of wage-and-price controls. He expressed concern about what he calls "the excessive rise in interest rates and a tightening of credit" which has put burdens on home buyers and home builders. jbut he claimed that price stability has seemingly been restored.

Mr. Johnson urged that our sociological programs at home and American aid abroad be continued. He proposed that, to help pay for these and the higher costs of the Vietnam war, there be a tax increase.

The "surcharge" plan to add 6 per cent to the existing tax bill of the individual or corporation will bring in between 4 and 5 billion dollars a year. But nevertheless fiscal year 1967 will show a deficit of 9.7 billion dollars, and the estimate for 1968 is a deficit of 8.1 billion.

There are critics, including Senator John J. Williams, Republican of Delaware, who say that even these revised estimates do not give a true picture of the deficit spending and that, under customary accounting methods, it would be more accurate to put the 1967 deficit at 18.8 billion dollars.

The economic situation is likely to remain uncertain until the Vietnam war is ended. While increased taxes may be necessary, even more important is a curtailment of expenditures apart from defense.

The President's comments on international problems were pointed. He reviewed developments around the world, and expressed the belief that American policies are making substantial progress. He even took an optimistic view of the relations between the United States and the Soviet Union and Communist-bloc countries of Eastern Europe. He said emphatically: "Our objective is not to continue the cold war, but to end it."

In one part of the message, the President spoke bitterly about Communist aggression, but he somehow ignored this when he advocated new East-West trade agreements. It seems incredible that he would be urging such steps when the Moscow Government is supplying MIGs to the North Vietnamese to kill American boys. The theory presumably is that the Soviets will be persuaded to diminish their aid and eventually to terminate it. This is diplomatic gambling.

The President also deplored the enlargment by the Russians of their missile program and indicated a hope that the Moscow Government can be prevailed upon not to start a new round in the arms race. But should the United States take a big risk in the meantime and sacrifice American security by continuing to spend billions for "butter" that might instead be used to build, for instance, a stronger antimissile defense as recommended unanimously by the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff?

For the danger of a third world war has by no means been lessened. The President said in his message:

"We have chosen to fight a limited war in Vietnam in an attempt to prevent a larger war-a war almost certain to follow, if the Communists succeed in overrunning and taking over South Vietnam by aggression and by force. I believe, and I am supported by some authority, that if they are not checked now, the world can expect to pay a greater price to check them later. . . .

"Our adversary still believes I think, tonight, that he can go on fighting longer than we can, and longer than we and our allies will be prepared to stand up and resist."

Today Is Tuesday

This new park on the southern approach to Manistee, Michigan is but part of the work of the Tuesday Committee, composed of hundreds of citizens interested in rejuvenating their city.

It was Tuesday and a group of friends who met every Tuesday to lunch together were gathered around a restaurant table. The conversation turned to the appalling appearance of their town, Manistee, Mich. and, as the men discussed, they also resolved to do something about it. Forthwith they formed a committee, calling it for the day of the week — the Tuesday Committee.

Eyesores included rundown buildings around town, especially along the waterfront on the Manistee River, just 2 blocks from where it meets Lake Michigan and an inhospitable approach to the city from the south. There was also a general lack of "caring" by property owners.

To arouse public interest, the help of the local newspaper, the "News-Advocate," was solicited. Every Tuesday the paper published (and still publishes) a picture of one or another substandard buildings, with no text beneath, but always with the heading, "Today is Tuesday."

After 6 months of these weekly pictures with no explanation, members of the Tuesday Committee called a public meeting at which they explained their ideas and asked that each resident present join the committee in its efforts. After the meeting one resident asked, "You mean that even if I just mow my lawn I'm a member of the Tuesday Committee"? and was told that he was correct.

Results were amazing. Owners of eyesores pictured in the newspaper rebuilt and painted the structures. Then they planted flowers around them to beautify them. Even absentee landlords, contacted by mail and sent pictures of their holdings, spruced up their properties or, if they were beyond repair, tore down the buildings.

The 5 original members of the Tuesday Committee borrowed funds, bought 2 blocks of buildings along the waterfront, paid for their removal and then deeded the frontage along the river to the town for $1. Plans for a marina are being completed and the marina will be constructed this year.

The approach to the city was cleared of trash and members of the high school senior class, inspired by the actions of their elders, gave up their usual senior trip to Washington, D. C. Instead, they used the time to plant beds of petunias along the highway.

Last year half a cent was offered for each bottle or can picked up along the roads. This offer was broadcast by the radio station, featured by the newspaper and advertised by a 12-foot sign. On the appointed day, when all debris was dumped on the former site of the city hall, the Jaycees, who received it, paid out over $700! This event will be repeated this year.

Property adjoining the city at the southern approach has been acquired, a landscape architect was retained to draw plans, and a park constructed. Maintained by the city, this park will serve as a lasting monument to the work of a dedicated group of men — the founders of the Tuesday Committee.

We Can Never Know

BY BRIGADIER CHRISTINE E. McMILLAN

Today nobody remembers him. Had he lived, he would be a centenarian. He was unmarried, so no direct descendants are living to remember his name.

Oscar Trenhour lived in Shenandoah, Pennsylvania. The Army came there in 1885, and Oscar became a Christian and a Salvationist through its ministry.

A year later he died. The day of his funeral was dark and stormy, but 150 people marched to his home where a service was held. His body, as was then was the custom, was "marched" to the Army hall where another service was held, after which they marched on to the cemetery, the soldiers singing softly as they went, "Shall we gather at the river. . .?"

In the memorial service that night, Oscar's father and brother gave their hearts and lives to Christ and his mother followed a few days later.

"It was worth the Army coming to Shenandoah if only for the example of this young man's life," said the corps officer, Captain E. T. Brown, also long forgotten, in his War Cry report.

Life seems often to be haphazard, formless, without direction or meaning, yet again and again one is astounded to see how the apparently unrelated bits and pieces fit with accuracy and meaning to form a perfect mosiac.

And not only do the beautifully colored or well-shaped pieces find their appointed places but the asymmetrical, drab or violently - colored pieces have also their place, without which the whole would be neither complete nor authentic.

I wondered, after reading by chance about young Oscar Trenhour in an old volume of The War Cry, just how far the influence of his Christian witness went.

Could there be men and women living in Shenandoah today -- or in some distant part of the world -- who, all unknowing, have reason to bless the name of Oscar Trenhour? A doctor, perhaps, a teacher, a clergyman, a mother bringing up her children to know God's love, a scientist dedicated to the betterment of mankind, a poet, a writer, an artist . . . men and women who became what they are and contribute to the world their gifts and graces, through a witness given by a young man long since forgotten, to people long since dead.

Nearly a hundred years ago a Jewish peddler called Mausche drove his donkey cart through the lovely Munster valley of Alsace-Lorraine. The children of the little town of Gunsbach jeered and laughed at the Jewish peddler and his donkey. They held him up to ridicule and showered him with abuse.

One child stood apart from the rest, pain and pity in his small heart. Years later this child wrote in his Memories of Childhood and Youth, "He went forward as calmly as his donkey. He just turned round and smiled kindly and with an air of embarrassment.

"And," continued Albert Schweitzer, "he taught me for the first time what it is to be silent under a storm of persecution. He became indeed one of my great teachers."

The peddler Mausche never knew that his gentle witness was to profoundly affect the life of the great doctor to the Africans, and neither do you or I ever begin to know the strength or the extent of our most weak and faltering witness to the reality of the Christian life.

Our Lord told us that His Kingdom did not come "with observation." It is the silent, wonderful work of His spirit in the human heart. If He could bless a few fish and loaves of bread to thousands of people, what will He do with a loving, dedicated heart and life?

THOUGHTS

Does thinking pay? I'd say it depends
Upon what one things about;
If a man his time unwisely spends
In grievance and self- doubt--
If he frets about the morrow,
If he yearns for yesterday.
He surely will know sorrow,
Negative thinking breeds decay.
But if he should be such a sage
That he would benefit
From past mistakes, turning the page
With gumption and with grit
To face the future unafraid--
I'd think his type of thinking paid.

Charlotte T. Place

A jet pilot stationed at Lockbourne Air Force Base, Ohio, asks his children to take turns saying the blessing before meals.

Recently, when one of the children ended his blessing with the traditional "Amen," he turned to his sister and asked, "What does amen mean?"

"Amen," answered the well-brought-up Air Force daughter, "Is the same as saying 'Over and out.' "

George Fuermann.

WHAT IS LIFE?

Spires outlast spears. Altars are more lasting than armaments. To the man who thinks, life is comedy; to the man who feels, life is tragedy; but to the man who believes, life is victory.

The Wonders of the World

STONEHENGE

Britain's Greatest Antiquity

Because of the relative isolation of Britain from the so-called civilized world until the advent of the Christian era, no mention is made of the great pile of huge stones arranged in a circle that is Stonehenge, by anyone who lived in the ancient world of the Mediterranean. But Stonehenge would surely have been called one of the wonders of the world, had it been known to classical writers.

The source of the 80 or more four - ton bluestone monoliths has been traced, by petrological identification, to an area of about one square mile in the Prescelly Mountains in what is today western Wales - a distance from Stonehenge in south central England, as the crow flies, of some 135 miles.

Solving of the technical problems involved in transporting these tremendous boulders and setting them up at Stonehenge around 1700 B.C. -- by primitive tribes unaided by axled wheels, strong pack animals, or builders' tools of any consequence -- as well as the tooling of the stones, passes our present - day understanding of this unrecorded era in history.

At its fullest development as a meeting place -- perhaps around 1,000 B.C. -- Stonehenge had become an important shrine where the Druid - worshiping inhabitants of the region held seasonal and religious festivals and other regularly scheduled events during the course of a year.

Stonehenge at the same time served as the people's official calendar.

The seasons of the year were determined by the angle at which the sun's rays penetrated the openings in the big circle of stones. In the middle of a smaller center circle of stones stood (and still stands) the Hele-Stone, or sun-stone. At the moment of sunrise on the longest day of the year, June 21, the sun seems to rest on this one stone like a ball of fire.

In 55 B.C. Julius Caesar invaded Britain. He did not conquer it, but visited it with his army and described it in books when he got back to Rome. A hundred years later the Romans sent an army to really take England, which it did. It is soon afterwards that Stonehenge was badly damaged -- probably deliberately by the conquerors or newly converted Christian natives attempting to stamp out the ancient Druidic worship practices.

Stonehenge lay neglected and forgotten until around 1600 A.D. Then speculation about Stonehenge began to be heard, and legends about its origins and purpose started to flourish. It was not until 1901, however, that deliberate archaeological excavations and detached scientific study of the stone ruins began.

BATHROOMS ARE GETTING PRETTIER, MORE FUNCTIONAL

Gone is the cramped, strictly utilitarian room of yesterday!

According to the Plumbing-Heating - Cooling Information Bureau, the typical bathroom installed 10 years ago had a white tub, lavatory stand and water closet in a 5x7 -foot space. Today's bathroom is more likely to be 7x8 or 7x10 feet. There's plenty of room for the things women are demanding -- twin-bowl vanity lavatories, bigger tubs, bidets and lots of storage. There's also more room to move around and make cleaning easier.

Manufacturers of bathroom equipment make their products available in a riot of colors and a variety of styles, so the homemaker can plan her bathrooms to fit the home's general decor. For this reason, many bathroom designers now refer to their equipment as "bathroom furniture."

If you're planning a new bathroom, it will pay you to visit a plumbing contractor's showroom -- not only to see what products are available but also to get information about quality. As in the case of everything else you buy, you can get products in a range of qualities. The wise home planner will shy away from the cheapies. Your bathroom equipment gets used more than almost everything else in your home, so it pays to buy the best. Good quality fixtures are more efficient, operate more quietly and are easiest to keep clean. The cost differential is modest, when you spread it out over the span of your installment plan.

You can get a quick rundown on what makes a quality fixture from a booklet titled "What You Should Know About Plumbing Fixtures for Your Home." It's available free from the Plumbing Fixture Mfrs. Assn., 1145 19th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

My husband was assigned to show several visitors, including an Englishman, around the base at Fort Monmouth, N.J. After the tour, they had a drink at the officers' club. They began discussing how certain accepted civilian moralities had to be put aside if they came into conflict with what they called "a soldier's duty." An American lieutenant used this analogy while speaking to the English visitor. "Suppose I told you," he said, "that a man rode a horse --not in the line of duty -- until the horse was lathered, exhausted and ready to drop?"

"I'd shoot the bounder," was the no-nonsense reply from the Englishman.

"Now, then," said the lieutenant, "suppose I told you that that man was Paul Revere?"

"I'd still shoot the bounder," declared the Englishman.

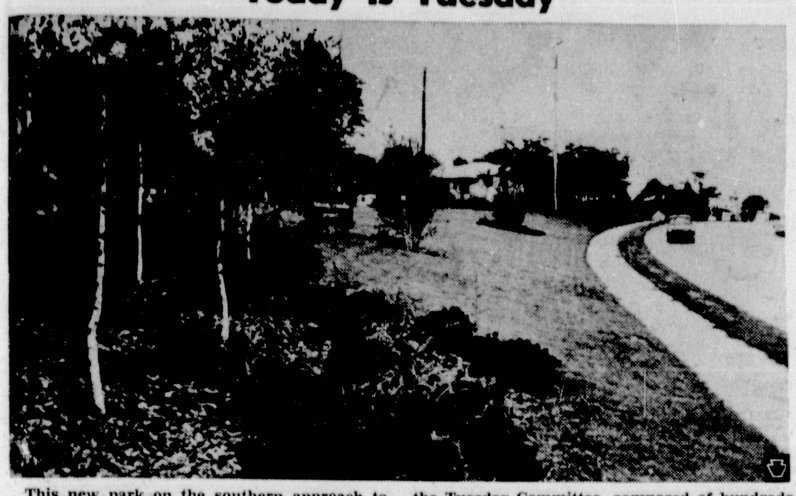
Today Is Tuesday



This new park on the southern approach to Manistee, Michigan is but part of the work of the Tuesday Committee, composed of hundreds of citizens interested in rejuvenating their city.

It was Tuesday and a group of friends who met every Tuesday to lunch together were gathered around a restaurant table. The conversation turned to the appalling appearance of their town, Manistee, Mich. and, as the men discussed, they also resolved to do something about it. Forthwith they formed a committee, calling it for the day of the week — the Tuesday Committee.

Eyesores included rundown buildings around town, especially along the waterfront on the Manistee River, just 2 blocks from where it meets Lake Michigan and an inhospitable approach to the city from the south. There was also a general lack of "caring" by property owners.

To arouse public interest, the help of the local newspaper, the "News-Advocate," was solicited. Every Tuesday the paper published (and still publishes) a picture of one or another substandard buildings, with no text beneath, but always with the heading, "Today is Tuesday."

After 6 months of these weekly pictures with no explanation, members of the Tuesday Committee called a public meeting at which they explained their ideas and asked that each resident present join the committee in its efforts. After the meeting one resident asked, "You mean that even if I just mow my lawn I'm a member of the Tuesday Committee"? and was told that he was correct.

Results were amazing. Owners of eyesores pictured in the newspaper rebuilt and painted the structures. Then they planted flowers around them to beautify them. Even absentee landlords, contacted by mail and sent pictures of their holdings, spruced up their properties or, if they were beyond repair, tore down the buildings.

The 5 original members of the Tuesday Committee borrowed funds, bought 2 blocks of buildings along the waterfront, paid for their removal and then deeded the frontage along the river to the town for $1. Plans for a marina are being completed and the marina will be constructed this year.

The approach to the city was cleared of trash and members of the high school senior class, inspired by the actions of their elders, gave up their usual senior trip to Washington, D. C. Instead, they used the time to plant beds of petunias along the highway.

Last year half a cent was offered for each bottle or can picked up along the roads. This offer was broadcast by the radio station, featured by the newspaper and advertised by a 12-foot sign. On the appointed day, when all debris was dumped on the former site of the city hall, the Jaycees, who received it, paid out over $700! This event will be repeated this year.

Property adjoining the city at the southern approach has been acquired, a landscape architect was retained to draw plans, and a park constructed. Maintained by the city, this park will serve as a lasting monument to the work of a dedicated group of men — the founders of the Tuesday Committee.

We Can Never Know

BY BRIGADIER CHRISTINE E. McMILLAN

Today nobody remembers him. Had he lived, he would be a centenarian. He was unmarried, so no direct descendants are living to remember his name.

Oscar Trenhour lived in Shenandoah, Pennsylvania. The Army came there in 1885, and Oscar became a Christian and a Salvationist through its ministry.

A year later he died. The day of his funeral was dark and stormy, but 150 people marched to his home where a service was held. His body, as was then was the custom, was "marched" to the Army hall where another service was held, after which they marched on to the cemetery, the soldiers singing softly as they went, "Shall we gather at the river. . .?"

In the memorial service that night, Oscar's father and brother gave their hearts and lives to Christ and his mother followed a few days later.

"It was worth the Army coming to Shenandoah if only for the example of this young man's life," said the corps officer, Captain E. T. Brown, also long forgotten, in his War Cry report.

Life seems often to be haphazard, formless, without direction or meaning, yet again and again one is astounded to see how the apparently unrelated bits and pieces fit with accuracy and meaning to form a perfect mosiac.

And not only do the beautifully colored or well-shaped pieces find their appointed places but the asymmetrical, drab or violently - colored pieces have also their place, without which the whole would be neither complete nor authentic.

I wondered, after reading by chance about young Oscar Trenhour in an old volume of The War Cry, just how far the influence of his Christian witness went.

Could there be men and women living in Shenandoah today -- or in some distant part of the world -- who, all unknowing, have reason to bless the name of Oscar Trenhour? A doctor, perhaps, a teacher, a clergyman, a mother bringing up her children to know God's love, a scientist dedicated to the betterment of mankind, a poet, a writer, an artist . . . men and women who became what they are and contribute to the world their gifts and graces, through a witness given by a young man long since forgotten, to people long since dead.

Nearly a hundred years ago a Jewish peddler called Mausche drove his donkey cart through the lovely Munster valley of Alsace-Lorraine. The children of the little town of Gunsbach jeered and laughed at the Jewish peddler and his donkey. They held him up to ridicule and showered him with abuse.

One child stood apart from the rest, pain and pity in his small heart. Years later this child wrote in his Memories of Childhood and Youth, "He went forward as calmly as his donkey. He just turned round and smiled kindly and with an air of embarrassment.

"And," continued Albert Schweitzer, "he taught me for the first time what it is to be silent under a storm of persecution. He became indeed one of my great teachers."

The peddler Mausche never knew that his gentle witness was to profoundly affect the life of the great doctor to the Africans, and neither do you or I ever begin to know the strength or the extent of our most weak and faltering witness to the reality of the Christian life.

Our Lord told us that His Kingdom did not come "with observation." It is the silent, wonderful work of His spirit in the human heart. If He could bless a few fish and loaves of bread to thousands of people, what will He do with a loving, dedicated heart and life?

THOUGHTS

Does thinking pay? I'd say it depends
Upon what one things about;
If a man his time unwisely spends
In grievance and self- doubt--
If he frets about the morrow,
If he yearns for yesterday.
He surely will know sorrow,
Negative thinking breeds decay.
But if he should be such a sage
That he would benefit
From past mistakes, turning the page
With gumption and with grit
To face the future unafraid--
I'd think his type of thinking paid.

Charlotte T. Place

A jet pilot stationed at Lockbourne Air Force Base, Ohio, asks his children to take turns saying the blessing before meals.

Recently, when one of the children ended his blessing with the traditional "Amen," he turned to his sister and asked, "What does amen mean?"

"Amen," answered the well-brought-up Air Force daughter, "Is the same as saying 'Over and out.'"

George Fuermann.

WHAT IS LIFE?

Spires outlast spears. Altars are more lasting than armaments. To the man who thinks, life is comedy; to the man who feels, life is tragedy; but to the man who believes, life is victory.

The Wonders of the World

STONEHENGE

Britain's Greatest Antiquity

Because of the relative isolation of Britain from the so-called civilized world until the advent of the Christian era, no mention is made of the great pile of huge stones arranged in a circle that is Stonehange, by anyone who lived in the ancient world of the Mediterranean. But Stonehenge would surely have been called one of the wonders of the world, had it been known to classical writers.

The source of the 80 or more four - ton bluestone monoliths has been traced, by petrological identification, to an area of about one square mile in the Prescelly Mountains in what is today western Wales - a distance from Stonehenge in south central England, as the crow flies, of some 135 miles.

Solving of the technical problems involved in transporting these tremendous boulders and setting them up at Stonehenge around 1700 B.C. -- by primitive tribes unaided by axled wheels, strong pack animals, or builders' tools of any consequence -- as well as the tooling of the stones, passes our present - day understanding of this unrecorded era in history.

At its fullest development as a meeting place -- perhaps around 1,000 B.C. -- Stonehenge had become an important shrine where the Druid - worshiping inhabitants of the region held seasonal and religious festivals and other regularly scheduled events during the course of a year.

Stonehenge at the same time served as the people's official calendar.

The seasons of the year were determined by the angle at which the sun's rays penetrated the openings in the big circle of stones. In the middle of a smaller center circle of stones stood (and still stands) the Hele-Stone, or sun-stone. At the moment of sunrise on the longest day of the year, June 21, the sun seems to rest on this one stone like a ball of fire.

In 55 B.C. Julius Caesar invaded Britain. He did not conquer it, but visited it with his army and described it in books when he got back to Rome. A hundred years later the Romans sent an army to really take England, which it did. It is soon afterwards that Stonehenge was badly damaged -- probably deliberately by the conquerors or newly converted Christian natives attempting to stamp out the ancient Druidic worship practices.

Stonehenge lay neglected and forgotten until around 1600 A.D. Then speculation about Stonehenge began to be heard, and legends about its origins and purpose started to flourish. It was not until 1901, however, that deliberate archaeological excavations and detached scientific study of the stone ruins began.

BATHROOMS ARE GETTING PRETTIER, MORE FUNCTIONAL

Gone is the cramped, strictly utilitarian room of yesterday!

According to the Plumbing-Heating - Cooling Information Bureau, the typical bathroom installed 10 years ago had a white tub, lavatory stand and water closet in a 5x7 -foot space. Today's bathroom is more likely to be 7x8 or 7x10 feet. There's plenty of room for the things women are demanding -- twin-bowl vanity lavatories, bigger tubs, bidets and lots of storage. There's also more room to move around and make cleaning easier.

Manufacturers of bathroom equipment make their products available in a riot of colors and a variety of styles, so the homemaker can plan her bathrooms to fit the home's general decor. For this reason, many bathroom designers now refer to their equipment as "bathroom furniture."

If you're planning a new bathroom, it will pay you to visit a plumbing contractor's showroom -- not only to see what products are available but also to get information about quality. As in the case of everything else you buy, you can get products in a range of qualities. The wise home planner will shy away from the cheapies. Your bathroom equipment gets used more than almost everything else in your home, so it pays to buy the best. Good quality fixtures are more efficient, operate more quietly and are easiest to keep clean. The cost differential is modest, when you spread it out over the span of your installment plan.

You can get a quick rundown on what makes a quality fixture from a booklet titled "What You Should Know About Plumbing Fixtures for Your Home." It's available free from the Plumbing Fixture Mfrs. Assn., 1145 19th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.
